

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

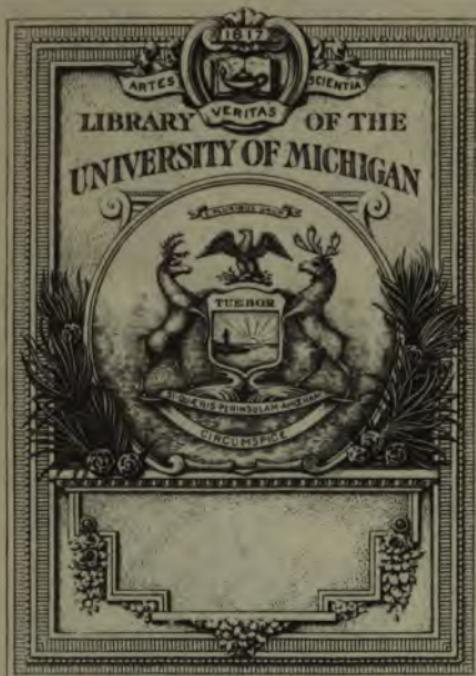

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

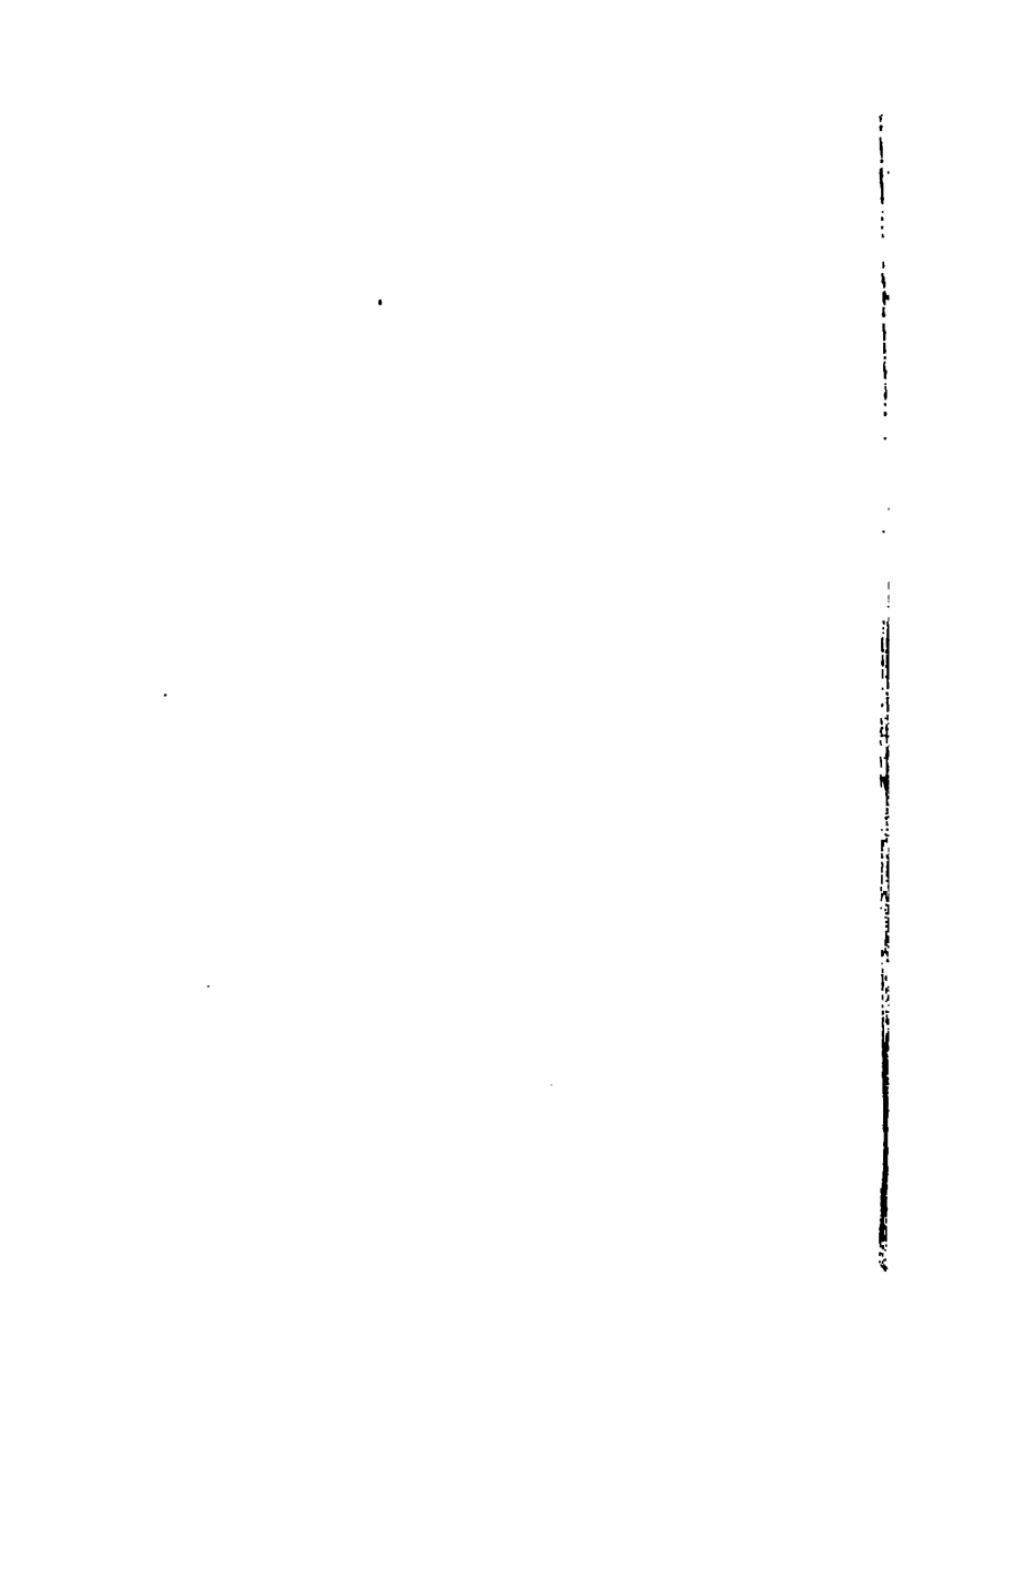

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

7203
84
1837

AN ESSAY ON THE ARCHÆOLOGY
OF OUR POPULAR PHRASES, AND SCIS—
NURSERY RHYMES.

BY JOHN BELLENDEN KER, Esq.

Wat is de taal dan de innige Redeneerkunst van hart end verstand vereenigd, end dat gene waarin wij ons-selver erkennen?—BILDERDIJK.
What is language else than the inmost reasoning of the heart and understanding combined, and that whereby we are most acquainted with ourselves?—[WHAT OTHER SOURCE CAN LANGUAGE HAVE BUT SELF-COMMUNICATION?]

A NEW EDITION.
IN TWO VOLUMES.
VOL. II.

LONDON:
LONGMAN, REES, ORME, BROWN, GREEN, & CO.
AND COUPLAND, SOUTHAMPTON.
1837.

Want, daar wij de zaken-zelve niet dan door sekerebare hoedanigheden kunnen, zoe moeten wij ons wel by het gene zij voor ons kennelijk hebben bepalein, en dus wordt in daad en wezen het voorwerp der Taal tot niets dan ~~abstraction~~ van hoedanigheden beperkt.

BILDERDIJK.

As we can only know things by their qualities, so is our conception of things necessarily confined to that which is perceptible to us in them; and thus, the object of all language is, in fact and essence, limited wholly and solely to ABSTRACTIONS of qualities.

INTRODUCTORY NOTICE

TO

THE SECOND VOLUME.

THE present Volume was ready for the press at the same time with the other; but circumstances, of no interest to any one but the Publisher, have prevented its appearance till now. One of the critics who have favoured the first Volume with their notice, rebukes it for being an illusive, unsatisfactory developement of our PROVERBS; ignorantly (I will not suppose intentionally) mistating the expressed object of this ESSAY, in which not only no one PROVERB is contained, but in which no such subject is even alluded to, by the title or in any one paragraph in any of its pages. In the very first page of the Volume, "Phrases and Sayings, which, by their literal form, do not bear out the meaning they are used in, and terms not yet satisfactorily accounted for," are announced as the object of this Essay. How, then, can the illustration of PROVERBS be foisted in as any part of the design, unless through sheer ignorance or purposed misrepresentation.

Of the term PROVERB, I am in charity bound to suppose the above critic is the only Englishman who does not know the meaning, or else I should tax him with a designed mis-statement of the fact. Of the etymology of the term PROVERB, I have found no trace in any work known to me; but take it to be as the Dutch phrase proeve werpe; q. e. experience sends forth; proof produces; tried fact produces; ascertained truth is the mother, or parent, always implying, of the subject or question in view, when the sentence is used. Thus, a PROVERB is as a sentence grounded in or produced by experience; an expression founded in and approved by proof or trial of the matter in point. Proeve, proef, proof, experience, trial. Werpe, the third person potential mood of werpen, to produce, to give birth to, to send forth, to put out or forwards. P and b are well-established intermutating sounds. V and w are a same aspirate, and, when pronounced continuously, as here, a same sound. F, v, and p, also interchange in use; fife and pipe are a same word, and so are the Dutch vigghe, bigghe, pigghe, and our pig. Er proeve werpe [here experience teems] sounds a proverb [in French proverbe], of which proverbium is the Latinized form. So that if I am right in this view of the word, to develope or account for our proverbs, would be to develope or account for tried truths, truths produced by the general experience of society, consequently well known to all, and thus a task of no great urgency at least, if not a supererogatory concern altogether.

It may be observed, that some of the phrases, accounted for in these pages as travesties, are to be found in equivalent terms in other languages (especially in the French), carrying a same genera-implication of sense as the travesties do with us. Such are evidently translations from the English, as bearing, in form of words, no relation in the general sense in which they are used, to the special import, the separate terms convey, in the language where they stand.

INTRODUCTORY NOTICE. ▼

ERRATA.

VOL. 2. p. 238.—After the words, “the imperative put,” add, put; q. e. put it, place it, take it; and necessarily implying go, place it from, ~~away~~, or out of where it was before; and necessarily containing in a same term the import of add and taking from; in both which senses but is used.

VOL. 2. p. 198.—The extract at the bottom of the page and the line and half of the following, belong to the article DOO-CE [p. 189], and are intended for the illustration of the verb to n. The article SHARPER appears at p. 64 and again at p. 181, but wa tended for one article, and as separate propositions for the etiology of that term; of which I deem the first the true one.

Put, for which two etymologies are suggested [vol. 2. p. 36, l. 9, p. 156], belongs, I should think, to the last given.

VOL. 2. p. 256, l. 19, for Bearte read Beurte.

Phrases and Sayings

WHICH BY THEIR LITERAL FORM DO NOT BEAR OUT
THE MEANING THEY ARE USED IN, AND TERMS NOT YET SATISFACTORILY ACCOUNTED FOR.

HE BEARDED HIM TO THE FACE.

He addressed him in a tone of defiance; spoke to him in an unbecoming manner, in a voice which showed he meant insult; bellowed to him; mis-called him. Hij berd, heet hem toe, dij vee's; q. e. he roared out, called out to him, thou art a blackguard; he growled like a bear, told him, thee art a beast! Baeren, beren, baren, to make the noise of the bear when enraged, to roar like a wild beast; implying, in the person so acting, the adopting a beastly and offensive tone of voice in the view of insult and defiance. Heeten, to say, to call, to tell. Vee, cattle, beast, and, when applied to a person, a term of reproach and insult, corresponding to dirty fellow, low rascal, blackguard, one of the rabble; de la canaille. The phrase is sometimes shortened to to beard, in the sense of to insult, to defy, to oppose openly, to behave outrageously towards. Baeren, beren, is the verb of baer, bere, beyer [a bear], and carries the meaning of both to make the outcry of that animal, and to act like a bear in other regards. We say, his manners are bearish, in the sense of rough, boisterous, rude, beastly. Bear was once spelt bere with us.

“ She [Zenobia] was so swift that she anon them heat,
And when that she was eldir, she would kill
Lions, libardes, and brys all to rent
And her armis welde 'em at her will.”—CHAUCER.

Berd, heet, sounds bearded. Dij vee 's, sounds the face.

TO KILL TWO BIRDS WITH ONE STONE.

To do more than you intended; to overdo the business in point; to have taken supererogatory means [pains]; in attempting one thing, to do, unintentionally, two. T'u kille toe behoord's, wijse wan's toe hun; q. e. towards you a chilling [cold] manner is proper [fitting], to him such behaviour is wrong [misapplied]; checking, to a disposition like your's, is absolutely necessary; but to one such as his, would be ill-judged [unjustifiable]. To keep such as you at a distance may be right; but to him unnecessary; implying a direction to the person in question to distinguish between dispositions, and regulate his conduct towards each accordingly, otherwise he will be acting wrong to all those he has to do with. The relation, in point of meaning, in the original may be traced, notwithstanding the change incurred by the travesty. Behoord, the participle past of behooren, to be due, to become, to belong to, to appertain to, and sounds burd; and so we pronounce bird. Wan, wrong, bad, vain, useless [evidently of the same root as vanus, and our own terms want and wane], sounds one, the aspirate w disappearing. Wijse, manner, mode, form, way, rule, tune, air of a song, and sounds with. 'S toe hun [is to him] sounds stone.

A STRUMPET.

In the well-known meaning of a prostitute. Er stier ruime bed; q. e. there [with her] money [a present] makes room in the bed; with the one in question, a tribute [pay] procures a place in her bed; for money you may have her for your bedfellow; and, morally, implying a selfish brutal availment of the distress of the ruined female by the reckless man. JOHNSON says, the term is of doubtful origin, and then adds the Latin stuprum [a rape] and strope, which he gives as an old French term for lasciviousness [lechery], for the probable sources; but I suspect neither word can have any relation to her who is reduced to the sad plight implied by the term strumpet; setting aside the impossibility of finding out any relationship in point of form or sound. HORNE TOOKE tells us, with his accustomed confidence and ignorance, the word is as the Dutch stronpöt, by which he means strontpot, the coarsest, most low-lived, and disgusting term in the Dutch language for a chaise-percé [close stool]; as if there was another heart or head, but his own, which would devise such an unmanly, beastly, expression for a female, even of that unfortunate and much-to-be-commiserated class. Besides, what relation has it to the state inferred by the word strumpet? What analogy in sound to that word? It would apply more truly to the skull which contains a lucubration so characteristic both of his heart and brain. Stier, steur, stuyr, tribute, pay, present, tax. Ruymen, to make room, to make place [space]. Bedde, bed, as with us; but, d and t and b and p being well-known intermutating sounds, we have only to pronounce d as t, and b as p, and the word sounds pet. Stier ruyme, sounds strum. Ruym and our room are the same word. Strontpot and schijtpot are equivalent terms for a same utensil. Stront [merda, stercus, ventris onus, oletum] plainly a same word with the French estronc, and the Italian stronzo, in a same sense; and probably as struntus, according to JOSEPH SCALIGER, apud veteres Latinos stercus rotundum.

Danno di morso a gran bocconi, ciascuno in una, e subito l'uno sputa fuori, e dice: Oimè, ch' e' sono STRONZI di cane.

BURCH, q. 83.

"Who, quoth she, has suffered approchen to this manne these common STROMPETTES, of whiche is the] that men callen theatre, the whiche onely ne asswagen no sorowes with remedies, bot thei wold feden and noryshe with awete venime?"—CHAUCER. BOETH.

HE STOOD IN HIS OWN LIGHT.

He was an impediment to his own success respect to the case in question; he was cause of his own wrong. Hie stood in his own hydt! q. e. in this case, to begin the attack is injury [wrong]; let him suffer for it [take consequences]; implying, as he conducted him wantonly wrong, so let him suffer accordingly it. Instooten, stooten in, to begin an attack rush or break in upon, and thus to commit an rage. Hoon, injury, wrong, affront, defia Lijden, lyden, to suffer, to endure. The orig expression resounds into the spelling of its pre travesty.

A JACK OF ALL TRADES.

As one ready for any dirty work; one always prepared to undertake any vile job he is wanted to perform for another. Er je hack! afval reed's; q. e. there, you dealer in vile articles, offal is ready! There you trader in foul where's a lot of garbage for your stall [wheelbarrow]. The phrase is commonly used as typical of a political jobber; some ministerial or state hand but applies equally to any base, unscrupulous time-serving tool of others; to one who lends himself from interested motives, to do the dirty work of an employer. It is never used in a good sense, never as importing diligence, capacity, industrial skill. Je, ye, you. Hack, a dealer in dirty articles of the vilest kind, such as dogs' meat, ders, old clothes, &c.; negotiator mercis vili Afval, the same word with our offal, in re both to sound and to meaning; and thus impo rejected garbage, useless rubbish. Afval has also the sense of falling off, backsliding, apostacy, turning the back upon friends, abandoning engagements, promises, professions, and even patrons, when become powerless. Te reed's, is ready, at hand, and sounds trades.

TO SEND A MAN TO COVENTRY.

As to silence some obnoxious froward person belonging to the society [party, company] in question; to put an end to the nuisance caused by the conduct or conversation of one who proves himself a greater ruffian than the rule of society makes it necessary to endure, except from some special countervailing interest to be expected from him. Toesie! end er m'aen toe! kauw! vent! te rije! q. e. mind what you are about! make an end of this subject of conversation! you chattering fool! you disgraceful fellow! to order! and thus a prosopopoeia in the person of one of the company who voluntarily takes upon himself to speak in consonance with the feeling he perceives to pervade the rest in regard to the one in question, and, of course, in full reliance of their common support as respects his treatment of the obnoxious offender. Like all judgments proceeding from the common feeling of an unprejudiced and disinterested body, [never unjustly applied, and, consequently, irresistible. Toesien, to take care of one's conduct; to be upon our guard as to what we say or do. Enden, eijnden, to finish, to have done with. Toe, expletively used in this place. Kauw, a jackdaw; and thus the trope of a foolish chatteringer. Vente, veyn, corresponds with our fellow in all its imports; but, in the first form, now only used in relation to some vile and despicable person, as we do the term fellow in a same instance. “Daer quam dees dagen een VENT by my, die my maecte verstoort; q. e. there came a fellow to see me the other day and put me in a passion. Te rije! order! behave yourself becomingly! and sounds as try in country, pastry, &c. M' aen, mede aen, with that concern [topic], and sounds man. Coventry has causelessly passed for a long course of time, through this accidental accordance of sound in pronunciation, for the penitentiary of this class of social vermin. In any other sense the sending a person down to Coventry implies neither disgrace nor punishment to him.

IT WON'T HOLD WATER.

Said in reference to some unsound [untenable] proposition; some hollow argument; some absurd reason which has been advanced. 'Et woont hol waerd 'er; q. e. it is there where empty words are to be found; that is where we find the hollow promise; talk without meaning or intention; what is said there is purely to the ear [to catch the attention]; importuning, that the whole which has been said is moonshine, and no more. Woonen, to dwell in, to abide in, to inhabit, to make a custom of remaining in, and rooted in wennen, ghe-wennen, to make a custom of, to accustom to, to use customarily [habitually]; but is sometimes used as outwennen, to disuse, to disaccustom to, to cause to leave off, to make to do without or want, and is then the source of our to wean, to want, &c. Here, also, belong our terms wont, wane, vain, faint, as well as the Dutch wan, and the Latin vanus, &c.; to which may be added the French faner (to fade) and foin, and the Latin scenum [hay, as faded grass], and the Italian fieno, and Spanish heno [hay], as well as affanno of the former language, and the afan of the latter. HORNE TOOKE, haunted by his Anglo-Saxon delusion, brings faner, affanno, vanus, èvanouir, fange [mud], faint, and fen, all out of the verb fynigean, to corrupt, spoil, pass away, turn mouldy [sour].

and says, that faint is as the past participle of that verb; a derivation which might suit vinegar, as spoilt wine or beer; but the fainting lady is neither the mouldying or souring lady; but the lady whose vital functions are at the time enfeebled [faded, decreased]; to grow faint, is not to turn sour or grow mouldy; but to become weak, to lose strength, to decrease in power of body, to want force, to be on the wane in vital principle. Besides, how is the indispensable concern of correlative sound to be settled in this dissonant, whimsical, and impossible etymology? Waerd, woord, word, word, verbum; whence veurwaerd, condition, agreement, promise; as the word spoken [given], the promise made. Waerd'er sounds as we pronounce water, which is as if spelt waarter. Hol, hollow, empty, where nothing is. Our obsolete words wanhop, the Dutch wan-hope (despair), and wan-trust (diffidence, distrust,) are belonging to the above brood of words.

* “Many a muscle and many an oyster
Whan othir men have been full well at ese,
Have been our fode, our Cloyster for to reyse;
And yet, God wote, unnethe the fundament
Parfourmid is, ne of our pavement
There is not yet a tile within our WONEST,
By God we owin fourtie pound for stones.—CHAUCER.

“ Of rosis there werin grete WONE †
So faire werin nevir in Rone (Rouen).”—IDEM.

“ A Shipman was there WONNING § ferre by west,
For ought I wote he was of Dertemouth,
He rode upon a rounchy || as he couth,
In a gonne of falding to his knee.—IDEM.

* A wheedling address of a confessor to his dying penitent, intended to persuade the dupe to leave a legacy towards the expenses of some new addition to the monastery he belonged to.

† Cells of the cloyster; separate apartments of the monks.

‡ The place of their growth. § Dwelling, abiding.

|| A nag, as the Italian ronsino in the same sense.

"These thynges also on right side and on lefte have me so envolved with care, that WANHOPE* of helpe is throughout me renne truelie."—CHAUCER.

"Never the later (quoth she) I saie not these thynges for no † WANTRUST‡ that I have, in supposyng of The otherwise than I should."—IDEM.

"But onis n'ilt thou, for thy cowarde herte
And for thine ire, and folish wilfulness,
For WANTRUST † tellin of thy sorowe's smerte,
Ne to thine own helpe do besinesse,
As muche as speke a worde, ye more or lease,
But lieth he that of life nothing retche,
What wwoman living could love sucha a wretche!"
IDEM.

"For all thing in my cure is Undir the mone, that may or § WANKE or wase."—IDEM.

HE SHOT AT A CROW AND KILL'D A PIGEON.

Missed his aim; did what he did not intend to do; went beside the mark in view. Hie sechie hott haet erg rouw, end killdt erbied je aen; q. e. in this case ill-judged roughness of demeanour turns the feeling of those towards whom it is used into hatred, and chills the ardour of good-will and respect for him who so conducts himself; ill-timed austerity quickly begets hatred, and cools the warmth of regard for him who assumes such conduct. The affected or assumed harshness here referred to, seems to imply its having been put on by the one in question to answer some undue purpose, for which it not only failed, but incurred odium and loss of respect and esteem from him towards whom it was used. Hotten, to curdle, to turn into, to generate, to collect together. Erg, arg, arch, sly, cunning, fraudulent. Rouw, the ferocious one, the austere one, the cruel one, the rough [repulsive, forbidding, severe] one. Erbied, observance [respect] due from man to man in society ; social regard ; b and p intermutate. Je, ever. Aen, upon. Erg rouw, sounds near to a crow. Erbied j' aen, pronounce b as p, sounds a pigeon. Schie hott, sounds shot. Killen, to chill, to cool, to repress, to freeze.

* Despair. † Mistrust, diffidence, suspicion.

‡ Disappear or grow up; die off or come into existence.

OTHER FISH TO FRY.

Said of one who neglects that which is useful and important, for concerns and designs which to others appear not only useless, but injurious, and so better left alone. We say, he has other fish to fry, of some one who will not attend to that which we may think best for him, but whose attention is drawn aside by pursuits which are either trifling or else derogatory. Haet er, vies, t'u veurree; q. e. ill-conditioned man, do persevere, and procure for yourself the hatred of every one; instead of employing yourself, you vile-tempered man, in trying to amend [controul] your failing, go on, do, and give loose to it, and make yourself detestable to every one who sees you. Haet, haat, ill-will, hate, odium, grudge; and haet er, dropping the aspirate, sounds other, there being no other representative in the Dutch for th, than t or dt. Er, there. Vies, morose, savage, cross, fastidious, whimsical, over-dainty, and sounds fish. Veurree, as the contracted form of the imperative of veurreeden, veur-reyden, to prepare before-hand, and sounds fry, the utterance of the vowels being lost in the preceding and succeeding aspirate and consonant; but the true proof will be found in the trying to pronounce the word itself, and if it can be pronounced according to Dutch prosody so as to make it sound otherwise than as we do fry.

IT SMELLS OF THE SHOP.

We may know where it came from by its quality [appearance of it]; we can see what it belongs to by the look of it; it bespeaks its origin by what we see

'Et smuile's af de schoppe; q. e. the smiling is according to the joking (if the joke is good, the smile extends to a laugh, if bad, contracts to a sneer); according to the joke so is the smile; the character of the joke is evident from the smile [effect] which succeeds it among the audience; and thus implying an import analogous to the one intended when its travestied form is used. 'Et, het, it. Smuile, participle present of smuilen, to smile; and thus a smiling [smile], as the sign of satisfaction [being pleased]. Af, from out of, consequent upon.—Schoppe, as participle present of schoppen, in the sense of spotten, to joke, to ridicule, to play with, to banter, to make fun of, and thus as a making fun of, or fun itself. Shop, in its unsophisticated import with us is probably the same word with the Dutch schap, schep [a safe, a place to put things bye in, a depository [dépôt], a receiving place, a hold], whence ship, in Dutch schip, as that in which wares are deposited—a hold for merchandize; in the closer or primary sense a trough, as a container of things; grounded in scheppen (to take up, to take into, to receive in, to draw in,) from the preterite form of which [ick schoppe] we have our term scoop.

A MUNTEBANK.

In the well-known meaning of a stage orator; one who boasts his nostrums from the platform to the populace; but now always used in a derogatory import. Er monde te banck; q. e. there is talking for the platform [stool, bench]; there's a mouth to the stage; and is as spoken by one, when he points out the actor of this display to his neighbour. The original form does not appear to convey any degrading import beyond that of a circulating, interested, and ostentatious parader of his oratory; one distinguished for a sort of impudence or assumption of speaking above or over the heads of his fellows. And the expression might apply with propriety to either a speech from the throne, or a sermon from the pulpit; for what else are these desultory displays, but to recommend the speaker's specifics for our constitutional wants in the one case, and our spiritual ones in the other. There is nothing in the original form of the term to carry any degrading sense, beyond that of an upstarting, ostentatious, assuming, and consequently humbug display of talk, unless we take monde in the sense of mouthing, grimacing, nor to denote the subject of the oratory it may refer to. The import has been evidently extended to its present understood meaning by use and time. The Latin terms circulator and circumforaneus, and the Italian ciurmatore, seem the nearest substitutes in import; for the Dutch kwakzalver [quack-doctor], the Spanish saltimbanco [saltabancos], whence the French saltimbanque, and the Italian ciarlatano, whence the French charlatan, appear to have a more direct or special import in regard to the character of the personage. Still chattering [prating] seems the usual adjective feature of him to whom the name is given; and ciarlatano is evidently connected with ciarlar, to prate, to chatter, and its equivalent cantimbaneo has a same direction of sense. The Spaniards designate him as rhetorico saltabanco; q. e. orator mountebank. Shakspeare styles him prating mountebank.

“Los rhetoricos saltabancos que vendian quintas essencias, y acreeditaban con gran copia de palabras algunos secretos medicinales.”—La Vida di Guzman de Alfarache.

“ As nimble jugglers, that deceive the eye,
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin.”

SHAKSPEARE.

And when the term is used metaphorically with us, it is always in relation to some humbug, showy character, some everlasting gabbler. A mere mountebank is one who is talk, and nothing else,—one whose speeches are empty sound. As for the Italianized term montambanco, I strongly suspect the original had been imported by some of the English adventurers, who joined the various parties of that nation as soldiers or leaders during its eternal civil broils, and who were in great request for their skill and fidelity. One of these makes a considerable figure in Guicciardini's history of these civil wars, under the name of Giovanni Acuto, an Italianized travesty of John Hackwood. I have never met with montambanco in any other Italian work than the Malmantile, Lippi, professedly intended to accumulate all the out-of-the-way and unusual terms in that language; nor had the authors of the great national dictionary, "Il Vocabolario della Crusca," another instance of the use of the word than in the same passage of the same author; nor has the ablest annotator of the Malmantile of Minucci, adduced another instance, but adds ciarlatano for its synonym. Montambanco has not, to me, the air of a genuine Italian word, although the language has the verb montare, to ascend, and banco for a counter or raised place.

" L'infegna di costoro è un MONTAMBANCO,
Che ha di già dato alli suoi vasi il prezzo ;
E detto, che son buoni al mal di fianco :
E strologato e * chiaccherato un pezzo."

Malem. raeq. cant. I. st. 56.

The mere getting upon a stool or bench does not necessarily imply talking when one is there; but by the form of our own term, as above given, talking is necessarily implied. Mond [mouth] springs from the thema mo-en, in the sense of to cut, [whence our to mow, as well as moth, as

* Gabbled, chattered.

that which cuts into, makes a hole in], and means, simply an opening, a cut; the mouth of a river, is the opening of a river; the mouth of a cannon, is its opening; and our own term mouth, formerly mowe and mowith, is from the same thema. And yet Minshew and Junius tell you, it is as μύθος (speech); but the mouth of a cow, and of a river, is as good English as the mouth of a man; and that through which speech is produced can never be the sense of the term in those cases. Horne Tooke derives the word from the Gothic matyan, matjan, the A. S. metian, in the sense of to eat; but we do not eat with the mouth, but with the teeth given us to eat and bite; without these the mouth cuts but a poor figure with a piece of beef. To put bread in the mouth, is not to eat it, but to put it in the way of being eaten by the allotted tools. The mouth of a harbour is not the place where ships are eaten, but the opening by which they enter the harbour. But the term a mouth-piece, in the sense of one who speaks for another, or of that by which a flute, &c. is played, is the travesty of the phrase er moedt [moeyt] bij 's; q. e. there is that by which the work is done; there is that which takes the labouring oar. Moeden, moeyen, mueden, to work, to labour, to fatigue, to operate; whence the old term moedte, moeye, work, labour, pains. Bij 's, bij is, is by, by which is; and p and b being interchanging sounds, sounds piece. But monde, as in the original form of the term at the head of this article, is as monde, monding, the participle present of monden, to speak, to talk, to mouth, to grimace; and thus a speaking, or talking. To mouth, is to speak with ostentatious absurdity, to grimace, to posturize with the mouth, either for the sake of deception or to divert; the judge mouths a sentence to scare the merry-andrew, to divert. Mouthless, as in a state to have nothing to say for one's self, in a dispirited [inanimate] mood, is, I suspect, as moedloows, inanimate, dejected, without heart or courage; and we say, “ he had not the courage to utter a word for himself,” in the sense of, he wanted spirit to speak. Loos and less are the same word, and mean wanting. Moed represents mouth or utterance.

“ But all to litill, welaway the while !
 Lastith such joie, ithoukid be fortune,
 That semith trewist, whan she wol begile,
 And can to foles so her songe entune
 That she 'em hent, and blent, traitour commune,
 And whan a wight is from her whele ithrowe,
 Than laughith she, and * makith him the mowe.”

CHAUCER.

“ Yit trowid he no gile, but went near to
 And scrapid the dorr welplich and wymid wyt his† MOWITH,
 After doggis‡ lyden, as nere as he couith.”—IDEM.

“ And yit had I nevir suspecioun, from that day till noweth,
 Who ded that carsid dede, till Machyn with his MOWITH, Afore yew hath knowlechid that the knyfe is his.
 So mut he nedis answer for his deth, ywis.”—IDEM.

A WILD GOOSE CHASE.

As when we say, “ he's gone on a wild goose chase,” and mean in search [or to attempt] something to find which he has no clue [no direction] or to perform which he has no previous means, and implying a point in question, the attainment of which must depend upon chance from want of due means in the one who undertakes it; and thus something of uncertain issue, the issue or place of which is unknown beforehand, either to the person in question, or his friends. Er wo yld guise, schie es; q. e. in whichever direction the caprice of the backbiter may rave to gratify itself, food will always be found for it; nobody can tell who may be the next object of the backbiter's venom; some one is sure to be a sufferer, though no one can tell beforehand who it may be; when or where the

* Makes mouth at him; makes faces at him; taunts him.

† Mouth.

‡ Sounds, noises, as the Dutch luyden, geluyden (noises).

malignity of the foul-mouthed and rancorous sneerer may burst forth; no one can tell more, than that, from the nature of the person, he is sure to find a subject somehow or somewhere; whether friend or foe, guilt or innocence, is to be his aim, remains uncertain till the blow is felt. So that both by travesty and original forms, distressing uncertainty and doubt are implied. Woe, however, wherever. Ylen, ijlen, to rave, to be in the fever of anxiety, to hasten, to be agitated in the mind [restless], to be mad; and woe yld sounds wild, as any one will find upon trial. Guijke, backbiting, calumnious jesting, sanna, sneer, malignant ridicule. Guijke van achter, back-biting, pointing in derision at one behind his back, treacherous misrepresentation. Schie, schielick, quickly. Es, aes, food; and schie es, sounds chace. Guyse, sounds goose.

TO SET THE THAMES ON FIRE.

As when we say, “he is not likely to set the Thames on fire, or he will never set the Thames on fire;” and imply there is not much in him, that he is a poor creature, a trumpery person. T'u sette, die t' heim's aen vaer; q. e. compose yourself, you who, in secret, are in a fright; I see you are in a sad fidget, show a little more resolution [presence of mind]; and is as much as to say, I see you are one who has no presence of mind, the quality suitable for positions of difficulty or danger; and, consequently, you are good for nothing; a poor devil. The travesty sounds startling, but proves nonsense when considered, in form of words, though bearing, by use, a sound sense when heard. T'u, te u, in yourself, within yourself, chez vous, auprès de vous. T'heim, te heim, in secret. 'S, is, is. Setten, to compose, to settle, to put in order. Aen, on. Vaer, fear, fright, and sounds as we pronounce fire.

TURMOIL.

Mental disturbance, harassing agitation, feverish anxiety, trouble; distressed state of thought. Ter moë yl; q. e. ailing in mind; ill at ease within; in a state of mental tribulation; possessed by restlessness of thought; wandering in mind; in a feverish mood. Moë, moede, mood, state of mind. Yl, ijł, ill, delirious, feverish, ailing. Ter moë yl sounds precisely as we pronounce turmoil. SKYNNER derives the term from tremouille, a mill-hopper! He might as well have said from the title of la Tremouille; it would have been just as appropriate. JOHNSON thinks the word is grounded in to moil, in the sense of to labour; but where is the prefix tur to be fetched from? Besides, it is labour of mind, not of body, that is implied by the term.

“ He seeks with torment and TURMOIL
To force me live, and will not let me die.”

SPENSER.

“ There I'll rest, as after much TURMOIL,
A blessed soul does in Elysium.”—SHAKSPEARE.

TO LIE IN.

To be in labour pains; to be in childbed; to be giving birth to the offspring. Te lyen; q. e. to be in a state of suffering; to bear with resignation; to suffer with the calm and gentle fortitude which characterizes the female, as distinguished, in that respect, from the male. To lie in, in this import, can never be grounded in the verb to lie, for in that case the expression would have no relation to childbirth, or indeed any meaning at all. As the phrase is evidently an ellipsis adopted from custom, of a child is probably the subauditum. But as lyen, lyden, has, in itself, the full sense of to suffer contentedly [resignedly], to do which is the characteristic of the female in all such predicaments as fall specially to the lot of her sex, and parturition being the common ban pronounced by nature upon the sex, the term has possibly been adopted per euphrasin in the sense now used. I need scarcely add, it applies solely to the human female; and that the various tenses have been formed from the travesty of the infinitive, or else present tense.—Lyden, lyen, besides to bear, to suffer, is used in the sense of contentum esse; æquo animo pati. Hij lydt hem met luttel; contentus est parvo.

SHE IS IN THE STRAW.

A familiar mode of saying, the female in question is upon the point of being delivered [brought to bed]. Sij is hin te ster rouw; q. e. she is upon the point of being in a state of complete ease [freed from all pain]; she is in the way of being perfectly at rest [peace, in a state of undisturbed quiet]; and what ease so perfect, or what repose so grateful, as that which succeeds sudden relief from acute and long-continued pain? The form of the original phrase implies, let the issue of the pain endured be either the being delivered in the usual course or death, ease [quiet] is the certain consequence, and the implicit promise of nature fulfilled. By the falling in of the term straw to the travesty, from a tender expression of humane sympathy with the female in question, it is degraded into one of heartless buffoonery. Ster, sterre, stark, undisturbed, fixed; ster-blind is, stark-blind, irrecoverably blind, afflicted with a blindness never to be removed. Roeuwe, rouwe, rouw, ruw, rest, quiet, repose.

HE TALKED BIG.

He spoke assumingly [consequentially,] as if he conceived himself of some importance and his audience of none; he spoke as if of the same consequence with others as with himself, in his own fancy. Hij tolkt bij ick; q. e. he explains by I [self always appears in whatever he says]; he talks always of self [brings self into every subject he speaks of]; he egotizes [is an egotist]. To egotize is formed from ego, in an analogous direction of sense. Ick, I, and ego, are one word. The Spanish Kings, exceeding their European colleagues in preposterous buffoonery of style, instead of their baptismal appellative, sign themselves Yo, el Rey [I, the King]!—a way of talking big with a vengeance! The French, in reference to a person's taking too much upon himself, being too assuming in his discourse, talking big, say, il se mettoit sur son quant à moi; moi [me] being in even a stronger sense of egotism than I. Ick resounds into ig, so that bij ick falls easily into big; the three same vowels resolving naturally into one by utterance. The Dutch brug, the German brück, and our bridge are one word; and so are the Dutch rug, the German rucken, and our ridge in the ground. Tolken, to explain, to interpret, to make understood by speaking, and the root of our to talk. We had once a verb to big [to bigghe], in the sense of to enlarge, to encrease; but from quite another source than the above big.

“They [the Monks] layith out ther large nettes,
For to takin silvir and golde;
Thei fillin coffirs and sackes fettes,
There as thei foulis catchin sholde.
Ther Servauntes be to them unholde,
But thei can doublin ther rentall
To BIGGHE them castles, BIGGHE hem holde*.”

CHAUCER.

HIGH WORDS.

As in the expression, high words passed between them, and in the import of angry [irritating, provoking,] language was used by each of them, and

* Homage, feudal estates.

a quarrel the natural issue. Hye wo hort's; q. e. when an offence is given, return it [make him suffer for it]; when an intentional insult is done, take your due revenge; implying, there is no other defence against the brutal, the official, the purse-proud, or the arrogant ruffian; and that to neglect avenging wanton insult is a cowardly desertion of your social duty, and an encouragement to the bully or ruffian whom you let go unpunished to do the same to others of the community. The phrase high words is literal nonsense, and has imparted ungroundedly the idea of loud words to it; but high words, in the truest sense of the phrase, are generally spoken in a whisper; when two women scold and storm at one another, we do not say, high words passed between them; but if two men told the one the other he was a knave, or challenged the one the other, in the lowest tone of voice possible, we should say, high words passed between them. And I suspect, in the phrase high wind, high is as hye, the contracted participle present of hyen, to vex, to molest, to tease, to irritate, and thus, as a cutting, sharp irritating wind, such as we term it when we feel it, when it prevails. Wo, where, when. Hort, offence, insult; with which in the ground our hurt is the same word. We say, "I was hurt at what was said" in the sense of, I was offended by it [felt it as an insult]. 'S, is, is. See article "HIGHWAY." Vol. I. p. 187.

TO CUT A MAN.

In the sense of to avoid [break off] his acquaintance [intercourse with him]; to cease to acknowledge him as known to you; and implying so to do because you have reason to think him a dishonest or knavish person, or that he had done some disgraceful [ignominious] act. Toe guit er m'aen; q. e. let all be at an end between us, you rascal, by this token [by what I now say or do]; and when one cuts another, or refuses to recognize him, the act is tantamount to saying or telling the other, he has reason for so doing, and an equal responsibility attaches to it in either case. As now used, the phrase applies to cessations of intercourse upon lighter grounds of offence, such as the one becoming disagreeable to the other, from newly acquired habits the one having risen higher in station, the other having become of less consequence, power, &c. &c.; but the ground of the phrase is in the above given and graver form of words. Guit, a rogue, a villain, resounds into either cut or cat; and cut, as has been before explained, originates in gat (a hole); the k and g intermutate; our to gnaw, and the Dutch knauwen, are the same word; and so is the Dutch kreunen, kuroen, groonen; with us to groan, &c. &c. Of the interchanging use of the c and k it is unnecessary to speak. In the travesties called NURSERY RHYMES, guit repeatedly turns out to be the mask of cat; and sometimes of cut. See Vol. I. passim in these rhymes. In what other way can the word cut be construed in the expression at the head of this article? As to cut off, it would be to kill; we say, he was cut off in the prime of life, in that sense. As to cut in two, is utter nonsense; besides, add what context you please to cut, it won't suit as the term is here used. Try it. Toe, a conclusion, an end. M'aen, meé aen, herewith, by this and sounds man. We have the expression of cut and long-tail, explained by Johnson as meaning men of all sorts, but absurdly accounted for as implying dogs, and consequently as some with long tails, and others with short, and so both kinds. I take it to be the travesty of—guit aenloncke t'heel; q. e. the rogue ogles [looks with a longing eye] at every thing [at all]; and thus imports the greediness of the rogue is endless [never to be satisfied], and includes the idea of a long or endless following up ; which, in some degree, comports with the sense of the travesty. If the original was not, guit aenlange t'heel; q. e. the rogue stretches his hand after every thing ; the rogue's hand was an endless grasp ; but then it comes nearly to the same thing. Aenloncken, to ogle, to look by stealth at, with a wishful eye. Aenlangen, to reach after. T'heel, te heel, te geheel, at all, and sounds tail.

“ At quintin he,
In honour of this bridaltee,
Hath challeng'd either wide countee :
Come, CUT AND LONG-TAIL, for there be Six batchelors as bold as he.”

BEN JOHNSON.

“ He will maintain you like a gentlewoman,—
Ay, that I will, come cut and long-tail,
Under the degree of a squire.”

SHAKESPEARE.

A BROGUE.

A peculiar pronunciation acquired by the habit of hearing and speaking some one language ; a mode of speaking which betrays the language to which the utterance in question is peculiar [confined] ; and merely implies a way of speaking, similar to that language to which the term is applied—a Scotch brogue, an Irish brogue, a German, or French brogue, are all true phrases.—And when the term is used insulatedly, it refers to a pronunciation acquired by the habit of speaking some dialect different from his who makes use of the term in regard to another ; and means no more than, he has the usage of a different tone and accent from him who uses the word. Er broke ; q. e. in him there is a habit [a custom] ; in him I perceive, by his speech, he has the habit of

* As many as will, as many as desire, and as an endless [indefinite] number of desirers to come, and all who may wish it.

speaking in the pronunciation of some certain language. We say, I knew by his brogue, in the sense, I knew what country he belonged to, by his pronunciation [speech]. And what more difficulty to get rid of or conceal than a long-acquired habit? and that of a native language, I suspect, a pure impossibility. Er, there. Broke, bruick, breuch, in German brauch, habit, custom, usage, consuetudo. A brogue may be acquired by a long residence in a country where the language differs from our native one. The g and k intermutate as has been before observed in more than one article of this essay. The Dutch kruycke, the German krug, and the French crache, are the same words. Formerly the verb to broke, to brouke, was in use among ourselves in the sense of to use, to have a habit of doing, to make use of.

“ For as to me n’ is* levir none net lother,
 I n’ am withholdin yet with† neither nother ;
 Ne I n’ ot who scrivh lefe, ne who the floures§,
 Well BROUKIN|| their ther service or labour.”

CHAUCER.

“ And whiles that she and I debated so,
 Came Diligence, and sawe me al in bléwe ;
 ‘ Suster,’ quoth she, ‘ right well BROKE ye your newe,’ ”

IDEM.

Johnson conceives brogue to be as brog (Irish), but the term applies no more to the Irish peculiarity of pronunciation, than to the Scotch, or Welch, or French, or Lancashire, or Yorkshire, or any other distinct shade of dialect. The transition of the terminal e into ue, is usual in the progressive change of spelling in our dialect, as well as in some others: tongue was formerly spelt tonge, and always so by Chaucer.

* More agreeable. † More disagreeable.

‡ Neither one nor other, neither that nor this. § Flower.

|| Make a good use of, employ well.

 Make the best use of, use it so as to make it truly becoming to your appearance.

STEP-FATHER.

As father-in-law, ; father only by marriage to the mother subsequent to the birth of the children, to whom he is thus Father, by a former husband.—Stup-vader ; q. e. rod-father ; father by the rod only ; father only as regards the right of rule and coercion, without any claim from nature. One who is only known by the right he has acquired of governing and correcting the children referred to.—The Dutch and German term for the same relationship is stief-vader [vater] ; q. e. harsh [severe, savage, rigid,] father ; and is formed in a nearly-like direction of sense. Our own father-in-law, has not a much more attractive import, and implies, one who is no father by nature, but purely by the cogency of the law ; and thus, one who has become the father of the children without consulting their will. The French, with their natural gaiety and love of ridicule, have made the term in an ironical and jocular direction of sense, for I take beau pere to be no other than as when we say, in the same figure of speech, “a pretty father indeed ;” “a very pretty sort of father to be sure !” and thus implying a very sad sort of a father, or a very queer way of becoming one.—Their adjective beau is often put to this ironical use : “qu'il s'est fait beau garçon !” what a pretty figure he has made of himself ! and used in reference to some one who has made himself beastly drunk. C'est un beau prometteur ; his promises are magnificent, but badly [never] kept to be sure. Il a fait une belle équipée ; he has got into a pretty [a confounded] scrape. Stupe, stuype, stoepe, a rod, a stripe, a lashing ; whence stoopen, to beat, to flog, of which staeperen, stoeperen, to excite, to provoke, seems a frequentative form. Johnson, in accounting for the term step-father, tells us—step in composition, is one who is related only by marriage ; but concludes, in regard to the term step-mother, it seems to mean, in the mind of those who use it, a woman who has stepped into the vacant place of the true mother ! The first assertion is a groundless fancy, and the second a vile guess. Step in step-mother, is as the above-explained step in step-father ; and so it is in step-son, step-daughter, step-children, and step-dame.

HIGH TIME.

As when we say, it is high time to go ; high time it should be done, &c. &c. Heughe t'heim ; q. e. a hint in secret ; a recollection [remembrance, memorandum, memorial] from within ; and thus, a remembering to do that which is referred to when the phrase is used ; and as much as to say, “I feel it is now fit it should be done or said ; I am sensible this is the period for acting ;” inferring an inward sensation excited by concomitant circumstances perceptible to him who uses the expression. High, in its usual meaning, can have nothing to do here : for what would be the sense of the phrase if it had ?—none at all. It is an evident travesty. Heughe, geheughe, the contracted participle present of heughen, geheughen, to remember, to bring to mind, to commemorate, to recollect, to recall to mind ; and thus, a remembering. T'heim, te heim, privately, in secret, inwardly, invisibly ; and sounds time. Heughe, comes near in utterance to high ; and in the Dutch term, hoog-tijd, hoghe-tijd, heugh-tijd, festival, solemnity, commemoration-day, celebration day, hoogh is not as high, but as heughe, above explained ; and so is our high, in the phrase highdays and holidays (festival days and holy days.) In the ground, heughe, hoghe, in its various shades of import, such as joy, memory, mind, intellect, hope, &c. &c. is possibly connected with hoogh (high), but, by degrees and steps, too rounda-bout for this place. Hoogh has taken a great variety of literal forms; with us it is in the shape of high, if not of huge also, of hige, of hie, of heyge, and in German of hoch, in French of haut, formerly hault; and quere if the Italian alto, and the Latin altus, are not also the above word? Our hill, and the Dutch heuvel, hovel, in the same sense, are clearly of this stock; so are our height, head, [the Dutch hoofd, the German haupt,] &c. &c. &c. Time, in its unadulterated sense, is like the Dutch tyd in the same meaning, bottomed in tyen, tyden, to go forward, to proceed, to advance, tendere, to stretch on, and is as the contraction of the old participle present TYING; q. e. a going on, (indefinately); a going on without return, an undefined advance,—and what else is time? While the Dutch is as the same tense and mood of the same word in the form of tyden; when used in a plural form, it is as separate goings on, portions of time. The French fois, as in une fois, deux fois, &c. as one time, two times, or once, twice, is merely a corruption of the old term voye (way, via), and thus as a going on, so that, une fois is as one going on, one turn, una vicis, alternis vicibus [par fois; by turns].

“ I sawe come, with a gladde chere,
To me a lusty Bachilere—
Of gode stature, and of good HEIGHT,
And Bialacoil forsoth he *height.”

CHAUCER.

BOMBAST.

Inflated discourse; talk in well-rounded, but empty, sentences. Bom-beaest; q. e. crammed with mere sound; and thus as noisy emptiness; full of sound, but nothing else. It is nearly in a same direction of sense we say swoln with pride,

* Hight, called, as the Dutch heet, in the same sense puffed up with vanity, &c., &c.; but bom is the root of bommen, both in the sense of to boom, to resound, to sound high, and then to die away to stillness [and we say, the swell of an organ, as the whole range of its sound; the booming of a bell, in the same way] and of bomme [bom-doos], a drum, bombannier, to chime, of our own to bump, as well as of the Latin bombus, the hum of a bee, the blast of a trumpet, or the hum of applause, and bombilare, to make the humming of a bee; and in a same direction of sense our term bumble-bee evidently belongs here; as also in the direction of to become round, to swell out, to grow into roundness, it becomes the source of bomb [shot, shell], of bum (which is scarcely entitled to be called so, without, at least, some degree of roundness), &c., &c. Aesan, aazen, beaesen, beaazen, to feed, to fill with food, to cram, to stuff with or in; and beaest sounds as we utter bast. To bump was formerly used with us in the import of to resound, to boom; though now restricted, by use, to sound caused by a blow, as by the violent coming in contact of two solid substances. Johnson gives bombast and bumbast as the two spellings of the word; but prefers the first, which he derives, with Mr. Steevens, from bombycinus [silken, and so flimsy, soft, smooth] and dissents from Junius, who brings the word from the Dutch boom (a tree), and sein (silk); but bombast, if it could be even fished up out of bombycinus by any rule of etymological analogy, does not mean soft, flimsy, or silken discourse, but high-sounding, inflated, discourse: a silky, smooth sort of person, is anything but a bombastical sort of one. Bump he derives from bum, and consequently as implying roundness; but a bump is not as roundness, but as a consequence of the blow or contact which caused the sound imported by the term, and which may happen without a swelling. We say, he came on with a bump; that is, he came down with a noise or resound, but no swelling is implied the necessary effect of so doing: and in fact, there may be none. The adjective bombast is properly as the past participle bom beast, sound-stuffed, i.e. empty.]

“He, as loving his own pride and purpose,
Evades them with a BOMBAST circumstance, Horribly stuffed with epithets of war.”

SHAKESPEARE.

“Doune to a marris faste by she ran,
Till she came there her hearte was on fire;
And as a bittern* BUMPFITH in the mire,
She laide her mouth unto the watir downe:
‘Bewray me not, thou watir, with thy sounε,
Quoth she; ‘To the I tell it, and no mo;
Mine husbande bath long ass’ is eris two.”

CHAUCER.

Johnson defines BOMBAST by FUSTIAN, and clearly receives the two terms to be founded on a somewhat analogous ground; for when we turn to stian we find him deriving it from futaine, which says is from fuste, French for a tree; and that tton grows upon a tree: so that fustian, in this they has, like his own bombast, a connection with mbyx, as silk [cotton]! And such stuff as this!—is caricature of etymology! passes through endless prints and editions under the eye of those, the curse of whose language is stained and rendered a subject of mockery by the very champion who undertook to prove and defend its purity and integrity. Fustian as the cotton manufacture so called, is the same word with the Dutch fasteyn, a Spanish fustan, the Italian fustagno, and the French futaine, as cotton cloth, and has nothing to do with a tree. A forest of timber-trees is called futaie, in French; but fustian, in the import of rant, loud unmeaning oratory, high-sounding, turgid talk, is, I suspect, as vast te hijen; q. e. so fast as to make out of breath; and thus a talking himself out of breath, and finally to have no breath to go on with. And is not this the effect of a loud, hasty, inconsiderate, ranting speech? Have we not all seen our leading Parliamentary spouters sit down panting for breath, after such a one, and blowing like post-horses after a driven stage? Vast, fast, rapid, hasty. Te hijen, to pant, to fetch the breath with difficulty, to labour for breath. Vast te hijen sounds fustian. We say, with breathless haste, in the import of haste that takes away the breath; and, also, he talked himself quite out of breath.

* Makes the singular sound which that bird does in a way peculiar to his species, and which is well known to naturalists and sportsmen.

“Nor will you raise in me combustion,
By dint of high, heroic FUSTIAN.”

HUDIBRAS.

When applied to prose or poetry, it is simply as composed in the style of ranting [fustian], declamation, talk; and in a secondary or metaphorical sense.

TO PAY THE PIPER.

To pay for all the rest; to pay more than your share; and so to be the only sufferer of the set in question by the affair referred to. Toe paije de pyper; q. e. the conductor to satisfaction there; the mean for paying the account there; the channel to contentment [quiet, agreement]; the bringer of peace [content]. Paije, paye, paai, paay, solvency, payment, fulfilment, the root of paijen, paaien, to pay, and so to satisfy; whence the Italian pace, our peace, the Latin pax, pacis, the Spanish paz, the French paix, of all which the Dutch paijs, pais, peis, is another form and a same word. Of the like source are also the Latin pacare and pangere, pepigi, pactum, and our to appease, to pacify, &c. &c. Pijpe, pyp, in the same meaning as our pipe, in all its uses; but here in that of a conducting [leading] mean, and thus a conductor [leader] to, and so a provider or furnisher. To develope the rise of this term from its thema, would be too lengthy a business for these notes, especially as that task has been performed by Bilderdijk in regard to the Dutch term; and I shall only cursorily notice its being the same word with pip, as the disease among fowls accompanied by the well-known symptomatic noise made by them in that state, and is thus grounded in an onomatopœy of sound, which has been extended to the pipe as the mean by which an analogous sound is produced: and thence to the pipe as of the shape of that instrument and also a conductor.

“Another shall have as moche iwis,
If he wol yeve as moche as he,
Of what countrey so that he be,
Or for right nought, so happe ymaie,
If he can flattir her to her PAIE*.”

CHAUCER.

“To Bialacoil than went in hie
Franchise, and saied full curtislie,
Ye have to long yben deignous,
Unto this lovir, and daunge'rous
Fro him to withdrawe your presence,
Whiche hath doe to him great offence,
That ye not would upon him se,
Wherefore a so'rowfull man is he,
Shape to PAIE† him, and to plesse.—IDEM.”

“And said that with her we should go
Both in her ship, where she was brought,
Which was so wondirfully wrought,
So clene, so rich, and so araid,
That we were both content, and PAID‡.”—IDEM.

Another term for pipe [as container, and so afforder, deliverer to, conductor to, channel of] in

* Contentment, satisfaction. † To content, to satisfy.

‡ Contented, satisfied.

Dutch is buyse, buis, busse, and the same word as bos, bus, the source of our box and the French boite, and of buyse in the sense of a large drinking cup with two handles, of buysen, to drink largely and so to get drunk, and of buys, drunk; whence the familiar or rather, low-lived terms, of to booze and boozy, in the sense of to drink like a sot, and of drunk. The thema is bo-en, in the import of to enclose, and so to contain, whence spring numerous other terms and forms, in various directions, of an analogous sense.

“ The veins unfilled, our blood is cold, and then
 We powt upon the morning, are unapt
 To give, or to forgive; but when we've stuff'd
 These PIPES, and these conveyances of blood
 With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls.”

SHAKSPEARE.

We say, the water is conveyed into the house by leaden [stone] pipes. PIPES, as the rolls or records, in the thence termed pipe-office, are, I suspect, so called from the tubular-shape into which they are rolled. Though Lord Bacon explains the ground of the name given to that office in another way, and as follows:—

That office of her Majesty's Exchequer, we, by a metaphor, call the pipe, because the whole receipt is finally conveyed into it by the means of divers small pipes or quills, as water into a cistern.”

BACON.

I have no doubt our term buss, in the sense of loud kiss, is the same busse in the sense of tube and in reference to the contraction of the lips into a short tube or ~~pipe~~, as is made in that way of giving a kiss or buss; but whether the Latin basium is the same word, and whether basiare and the Italian baeiare belong here, may be a question. Pyp er sounds piper.

A LAMPOON.

Scurrilous abuse; sheer calumny; mere slander. Heel ampt hoon; q. e. the whole burthen of the performance obloquy; the whole business of it scandal; intended for no other purpose than affixing infamy. Heel, entire, all, whole. Ampt, office, business, duty, and sounds amp. Hoon, infamy, disgrace, scandal. To lampoon and a lampooner are formations from the substantive lampoon. Heel ampt hoon, drop the aspirates, which are no letter's sounds, lampoon. Johnson offers no etymology. Bailey brings it out of lampon, as French for a drinking, connected with the popular term lamper, to guzzle; but in what way is lampoon to be got at through this word, either in meaning or form of letters? The original phrase is evidently abrupt and probably only part of a completer context of which this was the main sense.

A MEDLAR.

As the well-known fruit—never fit to eat till rotten-ripe. Er meede till'er; q. e. there is rottenness, gather it, then; there is matter in a ripe state, remove it. Meede is properly a ripe whitlow or boil, as that which is full of matter in a state fit to be removed, and nearly synonymous with buyle, a boil, and puijste, a swelling containing ripe pus: ripe (in a proper state to be opened, removed) is the term we use for a whitlow or boil fit to be opened for cure. Tillen, to take away, to remove, and seemingly the source of the Latin tollere. In several of our counties the same fruit is called an open arse; another of those unluckily belotted travesties of a very properly-expressed original phrase; and, I suspect, no other than een open aes; q. e. a food [fruit] plainly fit to be eat; a substance evidently in the state of an eatable; a manifestly ready-ripe fruit; if it is not as open aes; q. e. fit for eating, which comes to the same. Open, manifest, visible, evident. Aes, food, an eatable, fit for to be eaten, sounds as we do arse. Aes is also used in the sense of carrión, as food fit for animals which eat flesh in that state, such as crows, ravens, hyænas, &c. &c. ; galgenæs, is one whose food is ripe [fit] for the gallows.

A PAIR OF BELLOWES.

As the utensil by which a fire may be blown either in or out, as it happens; that by which a blowing is done. Er by er hoffe beloeye's; q. e. thereby a roaring [bellowing] sound is raised [brought out]; by the means of this a lowing [hollow] sound is produced. And the term merely implies that by which wind is caused to issue, accompanied by a continuous hoarse sound peculiar to that instrument, and thus, in the ground, as that by which blowing [i. e. bellowing] is forced out, but for what is not expressed and it is thus the term bellows is applicable to the mechanism by which wind is supplied to the organ and to the bagpipe, as well as to the fire-place. Bellows is simply the shortened form of a pair of bellows, and as the singular number, in spite of the travesty having given the word a plural termination. Hoffen, to raise [bring out] a sound, to bring out a hoarse, harsh noise from within, and probably the source of our to huff, to scold; and we say in the same direction of sense, to make a noise at a person, for to scold or find fault with him. Hoffen and poffen, is our to puff and blow. Loeyen, beloeyen, to low, to make the noise of a cow or ox, to bellow, and is here used as the contraction of beloeying, a roaring, a lowing, a hoarse, hollow, continuous, forced out sound. 'S, is, is. B and p being constantly intermutating sounds, er by er hoffe beloeye's; by dropping the aspirate in hoffe, sounds a pair of bellows. Johnson thinks the term may be a corruption of bellies, the wind being contained in the hollow or belly; and then says, it has no singular, though Dryden has used it in that number. If any one likes this etymology, let him take it,—I do not, and prefer the one I have offered, which does not require an impossible plural, but accounts duly for a singular number and for the sense of the term which Johnson's word bellies never can do. Any one who has heard the sound of a smith's bellows will not be at a loss to account for its effect being likened to a roaring or bellowing. By Chaucer the word is spelt belous; which form comes still nearer to that of the original beloeye's.

“Thou, neither, like a bellows, swell'st thy face,
As if thou wert to blow the burning mass
Of melting ore.” DRYDEN.

“He gan to blasin out a soun
As loud as *BELLITH winde in hel.”—CHAUCER.

BELLY.

I take to be as the contraction of beuling, beulinck [the intestines, the whole system of bowels, intestinum, visceratio] and grounded in vulling, vullinck, a filling, a stuffing, and thus as that which fills out the cavity which contains them, the belly-bag, but not as that which is stuffed out, as when the term is used in the meaning of a sausage or black-pudding. Johnson gives the Dutch balgh, and the Welsh bol, bola, for the source of the word. About the Welsh word I know nothing, but am sure the term can never have come out of the Dutch balgh.

GIBBERISH.

Formerly gebrish; as that which no man can understand when heard. Gij briesche; q. e. you

* That is, to make a noise like a bull; and is bottomed in the term belle, before it was travestied into bull and bole.—See Vol. I. p. 230.

can neigh; and implying, but I am sure you can't talk; a horse may understand you, but no human being can; that is neighing, but not talking. The expression in both forms is evidently jocular, even burlesque. The word has been derived from the old French gaber, to jabber; probably of the same stock as the Italian gabbare, to joke, to make game of. But will any direction of this word point out the meaning we attach to gibberish? The word may also be in the simple collective sense of gebriesche as neighing, and thus a-neighing? But this comes to the same thing. Johnson thinks it may be as chymical cant, and that it originally implied the jargon of Geber and his tribe!!! What next Doctor?

A PETTIFOUGGER.

As the term usually applied to some lawyer who is concerned in the meaner practice of his profession; especially to such attorneys who are not over-nice in regard to their clients, but ever ready to undertake any thing for any body for the sake of business. Though in truth the term applies to any one who transacts officially with society, if influenced by gain or subserviency to act meanly. Er bij heet hij voeg'er; q. e. there is he who accommodates himself to commands [orders] given; there is one who is ready to do anything he is bid; and implies a person who sticks at nothing for the sake of interest; who submits to be dictated to by another in respect to what he has to do; and thus, a ready tool for any base transaction. A pettifogging lawyer belongs to one in any department of the profession of the law, and the judge, or the chancellor, who submits to be dictated to by his party or his patron in his legal decisions, is as duly entitled to the epithet of pettifogging as the lowest Old Bailey practitioner. A pettifogging concern, means a base, unfair transaction of any kind whatever. Bij, according to ; heet, hiet, order, command ; voegen, to adapt, to suit, to fit together, its substantive is voege, manner, way of doing, and the source of the Italian foggia in the same sense. It is useless to be always repeating, b and p intermunate in sound, and the same in regard to v and f. But sound b as p, and v as f, and by heet voeg'er is pettifogger, once spelt petivoguer. I suspect our term a pet, as a ruling favourite, one who does as he likes with the one to whom he is the pet, is as er beheet, q. e. there's power, there you see the effect of power over another, what he is there he is by influence. Beheet is a very old term for power, command, jurisdiction. Pettish, is as he who acts with the foward and overweening manner of a favourite, and thus as one spoilt by indulgence. JOHNSON brings pettifogger out of the French epithet petit, and the verb voguer, to float on, to go on by the force of oars. Now what can these two words have to do with that term ? Did he ever ask himself that question ? Or did he impute some meaning to them unknown to others ?

“ The worst conditioned and least cliented PETIVOGUERS, get, under the sweet bait of revenge, more plentifull prosecution of actions.”—CAREW'S SURVEY OF CORNWALL.

“ Your PETTIFOGLERS damn their souls,
To join with knaves in cheating fools.”—HUDIBRAS.

A LIBEL.

As that by the making public of which, another may suffer, whether true or false. Er lye b'el [by el]; q. e. there is that by which another may suffer; there is that by which injury may be inflicted on another ; that from which another may be pained. The term has been by JOHNSON and others held to be as the Latin libellus, in French libelle, as a book or writing for the purpose of exposing a person to shame ; but in itself meaning simply a small book or writing, and never a libel, in our sense, except from the contents or epithet, as libellus famosus, in French libelle diffamatoire, and with that adjunct carmen becomes a satire under the phrase carmen famosum. But libel requires no context or subaudition, to convey the full meaning of an injurious composition, and may be spoken, or even acted or painted, as well as written; nor do I believe it to be grounded in any other than the above phrase; which at once constitutes it in its full sense. We say an infamous libel in the import of one more virulent than common, as we say an infamous scoundrel, infamous rascal, though each of those terms are pretty explicit without this additional epithet. Libellus may be a good source for libel as used in the civil law practice. Er, there. Bij, by. Lijden, lyden, lijen, lyen, to be in pain, to suffer, to grieve; and er lye b' el sounds a libel. From libel we have formed to libel, libeller, &c. &c.

“ Etiam sparsos se je in curia FAMOSOS LIBELLOS, nec expavit, nec magna cura redarguit. Ac ne requisitis quidem auctoribus id modo censuit, cognoscendum post hac de iis, qui libellos aut carmina ad infamiam cujuspam sub alieno nomine ederent. ”—SUETONIUS.

“ Who wote if al that Chaucer wrate was trewe ?
 Nor I wote not if this narracion
 Be authorised, or forgid of the newe,
 Of some Poet by his invencion,
 Made to reporte the lamentacion,
 And wofull ende of this Creseide,
 And what distresse she was in or * she diede.

Whan Diomede had al his appetite
 And more fulfilled of this faire lady ;
 Upon another sette was his delite,
 And sende to her a LIBEL repudy, †
 And her excluded fro his company,
 Than desolate ‡ she walked up and doun
 As some men faine, in the courte as commune.”—CHAUCER.

* Ere, before.

† A writing to inform her he renounced her connection.

‡ Driven by the villainy of Diomede to starve or turn prostitute.

" The same lawe that joyneth by wedloke, wythout forsayng the same lawe, geveth LIBEL of partition * bycause of divorce, both demed and declared."—CHAUCER.

" Good heaven ! that sots and knaves should be so vain,
To wish their vile resemblance may remain !
And stand recorded at their own request
To future days, a LIBEL †, or a jest."—DRYDEN.

LIABLE.

Subject to, chargeable [burthenable] with, obnoxious to. Lije er b' el [by el]; q. e. suffering there [in the case] is from another quarter; enduring, in this instance, is independent of self-will or choice; and implies the being, on the point in question, subject to some infliction over which our will or consent has in that case no controul, no power of evading; as in the expressions, we are all liable to death; he is liable to fits; he has made himself liable for another by so doing; his plan is liable to many defects, &c. &c. Lye, as in the preceding article has the sense of enduring an injury, a misfortune, pain. El, another, another thing or person, and, adverbially, elsewhere, another quarter. Er, there, in this case, here, and by representing a in sound and sense, gives to lye er b' el, the same utterance as that with which we utter liable. JOHNSON derives the term from the French lier, to tie; unless by calling it old French, he refers to some other import, if it ever had one, that would suit this word. But where? It is a mere guess suggested by the first syllable li, and a groundless one.

" But what is strength without a double share
Of wisdom ? Vast, unwieldy, burthensome,
Proudly secure, yet LIABLE to fall
By weakest subtleties."

MILTON.

* Sentence of separation.

† Evidently without reference to either writing or printing.

HE PUTS THE CART BEFORE THE HORSE.

To ill-time what is to be done, to do something out of its place [unseasonably]; to put in its wrong place [out of order]. Hij put's; die keert bij, voor de hij o'er's; q. e. he is exhausted; he turns aside [leaves off] before the job [hard work, labour] is done [finished]; and thus implies he does so at a wrong time, before the stated period, before it is proper; and which carries with it in other terms, an analogous sense with that the travesty is used in; the literal form of which imports that which nobody ever thought of doing since language was formed. No popular phrase used for the communication of a social circumstance was ever grounded in sheer buffoonery. Popular phrases are the expressions of the common sense of society, in regard to the point in question, not the extravagancies of buffoons. Put, geput, the participle past of putten, to exhaust, whence the French puit (a well) as that which is drawn out of or made by being drawn from, and puiser, épuiser, to exhaust, as well as our pit, and the Latin puteus, and the Italian pozzo, and Spanish pozo. Keeren bij, to turn aside, to turn off near to. Voor, veur, before. Hije, as the participle present of hijen, to labour hard, to pant from fatigue, and thus as hard work. O'er, over, over, ended. 'S, is, is. Hije o'er's, sounds horse.

LEGERDEMAIN.

As in the expression, it was quite legerdemain [all legerdemain] and in the import of, it was quite successful, answered completely, to which, by a misconception of the true form of the word, we have imparted the notion of, as if done by magick [enchantment]. Ley er die mee' inne; q. e. there's the way by which profit [success] is certain; that's the road by which you are sure to be brought home [to succeed in what you intend]; that's the true path to gain ; the infallible way to obtain what you desire. Ley, way, manner, mode, mean ; and the source of our terminal ly, as in mannerly, manly, mainly, purely, closely, &c. &c. where it imports like, in the way of, in the form of ; y and g are intermutating sounds ; to give was formerly spelt by Chaucer and others, to yeve ; and our to yield, formerly spelt to gelde, in the sense of to produce, to give up, or out, or in, is the same word with Dutch gelden, gilden, to be worth, to requite [return] in value. Die, which. Meé, mede, wherewith, with, by which, at the same time. Inne, as inning, the old form of the participle present of innen, to furnish, or bring in profit, gain, revenue, and here used in a substantive sense. Sound y as g, and ley er die meé inne, comes out legerdemain, JOHNSON, led by the sound, fancied the term might be as légrét  de main, of course implying as a thing done by sleight of hand [conjunction] ; but légr t  de main has not even that import ; it may be used in regard to a good writing master or fiddler, but never in regard to a conjuror. Il a le main leger, may be said of a surgeon. We don't say light of hand, in allusion to conjunction, but sleight of hand, where sleight is as sleight, slecht, smooth. In fact, the English term merely means unembarrassed, free, ready, something completely done, well performed, done in a sure way ; and the idea of magic has been combined with the term simply from this mistaken notion of the source of the word. Lege  de main will never bring into any Frenchman's head the idea of conjunction, and when the term is so used by us, it is wrongly used.

A SAILOR.

In the known sense of the word, is evidently from the Dutch seghel, seyl, sail [formerly seyll]. And seyl, zeil, is properly gezeil or gezeul, from zeulen, zeilen, to draw, whence the German zeil, a rope, as that which draws and is drawn by. Bilderdijk hesitates however between the above source and that of the thema zie-en, to draw, in German ziehen, in Dutch tijen, tien, whence touw, a rope, as that which is drawn by or that which draws. So that sail is, either way, as that which draws on the vessel or that by which the vessel is drawn or the drawing or draft of the vessel. And a sailor I take to be as the handler or manager of the sails, or sailing of the vessel; and in the same way we make tailor from the French tailler, to cut, and thus as the cutter out or manager of the cutting; and which tailler, in Italian tagliare, is, I suspect, grounded in the Dutch deylen, deelen, to divide, to apportion by division, to deal out; the t and d being intersounding letters; and what is to cut—but to separate or divide? The term sailours is used by Chaucer evidently in the meaning of strolling actors [dancers] who displayed their feats in the management of the rope in various ways, such as dancing with it in the hands, and casting it to and fro, flying from heights by means of it, &c. as was usual with those people in former days, and still is in some parts of the continent. When we say of a ship, she is a good sailer, the term is then as the Dutch zeiler, zeilder, in the same sense and spelt with an e instead of an o. To sail, as seijlen, zeilen, is to draw on, to advance, to make way. We say, the voyage draws towards its conclusion, in the sense of advances towards its end. And this verb can be used simply in the sense of to advance gradually, evenly, continuously, without recurrence to metaphor.

“ Speak again, bright Angel! for thou art
As glorious to this sight, being o'er my head,
As is a winged messenger from heav'n,
When he bestrides the lazy-pacing clouds,
And SAILS upon the bosom of the air.—SHAKSPEARE.

"So when they had ydyned they rysen up echoone,
And drew them to counsell, what was best to doon.
Som seyd the best rede that we do may,
To throw Geffrey ovir the bord, and SEYLL forth our way :
But for ~~the~~ dread of Beryn, som would not so."—CHAUCER.

"Tho mightist thou karollis sene,
And folke daunce, and merie ben,
And made many a faire tourning,
Upon the grene grasse springing,
There mightist thou se these flutours,
Minstrallis and eke joyelours,
That well to singin did their paine,
Some songin songis of Loraine,
For in Loraine ther notis be Full swetir than in this contré ;
There was many a timbestere *,
And SAILOURS †, that I dare wel swere
Ycothe ther crafte full parfity,
The Timbris up full subtilly
Thei castin, and hent them full oft,
Upon a finger faire and soft,
That thei ne failed never mo"—ID. R. R.

The French matelot and the Dutch matrooss, as the terms for sailor in those languages, are both from the Italian matelaso, materaso, (whence also the French matelas, and our mattress) in the sense of a sleeping place, something to sleep on, a cot, a hammock, which last word is the corruption of the Dutch hangmak, hangmat, in the import of a hanging bed or sleeping place, a cot.

THE SIROUDS.

As the standing rigging of a ship, the side cordage by which its masts are supported, and by which they are also ascended; in French haubans, [hautbans]; in Dutch staande wande [want]. De

* A female who played upon the timbrel, and grounded in the French timbre, as a bell that has no clapper, but is played on by striking or touching from without, as a clock bell, chiming bells, &c.

† As players with and handlers of the rope used in their various feats of activity.

schrydes; q. e. the stridings, the bestridings [the straddlings]; and, like all denominatives, inferring a subauditum, which is here either ropes, cordage, rigging or some equivalent term; and thus as the striding, [divaricating] cordage, and which in truth it is in a state of converging into a common point at the mast-head from the sides of the ship below, and then presenting the form of a stride or straddling. Unless the term is as schrijdes, [schredes] steps, [ladders] which by their intersecting ratelines they in fact are. Either source will answer; and in the ground is the same word. Schrede, a step, is as schre-e-de, from schre-en, in the sense of to diverge. Schrydes sounds closely to shrouds. Schryden, beschryden, is to stride, to bestride, to straddle, in the usual import of those terms. But SHROUD, as the covering of the dead [the dress of the corpse] is, I suspect, as a metathesis of schoort, geschoort, and so as schroot, covered, and thus as that by which a thing is covered or cloathed. Voorschoot [schort] is an apron, as that by which the front of the body or lap is covered. The thema is scho-en, to surround, to enclose, to cover; whence the Dutch schors, schorse, [bark, rind, as that which covers the tree]; hence the French écorce in the same sense, with which the Latin cortex is closely akin. Our escort, the French escorte belongs here also, as that which covers or protects. And so does our to shroud, in the sense of to cover, to envelope, and shroud, as protection, cover.

“ It would warm his spirits,
To hear from me you had left Antony,
And put yourself under his shroud, the universal landlord.

SHAKSPEARE.

“ Now the wasted brands do glow,
Whilst the screech owl screeching loud,
Puts the wretch that lies in woe,
In remembrance of a SCHROUD.

1D.

“ Whereof astained, my fote I gan withdrawe,
 Full gretly wondiring what it might be,
 That he so laye, and haddin no felawe,
 Ne that I coulde no wight with him yse,
 Wherof I had grete routhe, and eke pite,
 And gan anon so softly as I coude,
 Among the bushis prively me to shroude.”

CHAUCER.

“ If I die before thee, shroud me
 In one of these same sheets.”—SHAKSPEARE.

“ The ancient Egyptian mummies were shrouded in a number of folds of linnen, besmeared with gums, like sere cloth.”

BACON.

“ If you stray attendance, be yet lodged,
 Or shroud within these limits, I shall know
 Ere morrow wake.”

MILTON.

JOHNSON says shroud is as the Anglo-Saxon scrud;—very likely, but what's scrud? Horne Tooke tells us the same thing, adding to this tit-for-tat sort of etymology, this verdad de Perogrullo, a groundless absurdity, by asserting the shrouds [shrowds] of a ship are as, any thing with which the masts of a ship's are dressed or clothed! a derivation utterly inapplicable to standing ropes at a wide distance from the mast, to which they are no more a covering than its ropes are to a marquee. The Anglo-Saxon term originates in the same thema as shroud, and is the same word in a sister dialect, and the issue of a same parent stock. Our terms shoe, shove, as well as many others in the correlative dialects, also belong here, as will be shewn in some future articles of this essay.

“ The tackle of my heart is crackt and burnt,
 And all THE SHROUDS * wherewith my life should sail,
 Are turned to one little hair.”

SHAKSPEARE.

* What becomes of the shrouds in this place, if they meant coverings.

—Such a noyse arose,
As the shrowdes * make at sea in a stiffe tempest,
As lowd, and to as many tunes.”—SHAKSP. Henry VIII.

THE DEAD OF.

As in the phrases, the dead of night, the dead of winter, I take to be as die duide af; q. e. the pointing out of; the demonstration [evidence, proof] of; as thus, as undoubted or evident winter; winter or night with all the marks and signs which denote winter or night, such as cold in one case, and darkness in the other. Duide, diede, as the contraction of the participle present of duiden, dieden, to signify, to point out, to show, to demonstrate. Johnson interprets dead in these phrases, as stillness, gloom; but the dead of winter may be a very stormy time; and so may the dead of night; at all events, that source for the term in these phrases never can be real. Duide sounds dead.

SOUND.

As in the phrase sound asleep, I take to be as soend, gesoend, becalmed, at rest, pacified, appeased, quiet, freed from disturbance; and as the participle past of soennen, zoennen, to appease, to set at rest, to make quiet, to compose, to calm, to conciliate, to pacify. And sound sleep is as quiet, composed, undisturbed, sleep,; sleep which refreshes, sets to rights, composes, quiets, does good to. Sound in this sense has nothing to do with sound, healthy, or sound, as that which is heard; and is simply as calm, quiet, composed. And sweet, in the expression sweet sleep, is as the Dutch soet, suet, in the same sense, and grounded in so, zo, as soft, as are also soen and soenen, in the above sense; soft sleep is sweet sleep.

* If shrowdes could, by any conundrum, be here in the sense of covering or clothing, why then the strings of a fiddle or harp would be as well entitled to the appellation, and even better. It is a mere conceit.

A HOAX.

A bite, a take in, a deception, a cheat. Er hoek's [haeck's]; q. e. in this there is hook; this is bait in which there is a hook; implying, that which is presented to your view is merely intended for enticement to the snare it conceals; it is a bait which covers a hook to catch you; bite it, you are taken. Of hoeck's, haeck's, we have made hoax; hence to hoax. Hoeck, haeck, haak, a hook, a fishing hook, also an angle, a corner, whence our old halke, in the same sense. We say to fish a man, and mean to draw him in by some artifice of discourse, to catch or entangle him by some subtilty. The word is not in Johnson's dictionary.

“ While others FISH, with craft for great opinion,
I with great truth, catch mere simplicity.”—SHAKESPEARE.

“ As these yonge clerkes that ben likerouse
To redin artis that ben curious,
Seekin in every HALKE and every herne *,
Particuler sciencis for to lerne.”—CHAUCER.

“ Ne menish thou not Urban, (quoth he tho,)
That is so often dampnid to be dede,
And wonnith aye in HALKIS to and fro,
And dare not onis puttin forth his hede.”—ID.

THE TRUTH IS NOT TO BE SPOKEN AT ALL TIMES.

A phrase, in form of words and literal sense, carrying a cover and excuse [pretence] for any lie and prevarication that can be uttered, and unless interpreted with endless reservations, scarcely to be used without disgust. Hence, evidently, not introduced into popular currency under such form, and has been distorted from its original one, by analogy of sound, conveyed by form of letter, on an insensibly transmuted language of a same original dialect. Its import is simply,—a thing, good in itself, may be misapplied so as to become an evil; what may be necessary in one state of circumstances, may be mischievous in another. De drut is nood t'u; bij spie hoeck en aet al t' heim's; q. e. the trusty confidant is necessary to you; in the spy [pryer] you have only a hook and bait in disguise [concealment]; the confidential friend is a blessing, but the prying inquisitive watcher, the scrutinizer of your words and actions, can have no other object than to betray you. A disinterested, uninquisitive friend is a necessary of life; but when that cover is used to gratify inquisitiveness and interested objects, it is a spy who means to betray and injure you. Implying the true friend wishes only to know as much as may enable him to serve you duly; but the pretended one wants to know every thing concerning you, that he may either ruin or laugh at you. Thus carrying the sense, “that a disinterested, uninquisitive confidant is what is wanted, but an interested, encroaching one to be avoided;” one in some degree analogous to the import of the travestied form of the saying. Drut, druijt, draut (in German traut) confidant, trusty one, faithful one, and travesties into truth, d and t intermutating in sound, and either representing our th in Dutch. Nood, necessary, wanted, and sounds not. Spie, spiede, bespieder, spy, watch, scout, overseer. Hoeck, haeck, hook. Aet, bait, food. Al, entirely, altogether, omnind. Te heim, in secret. 'S, is, is. The travestied and original forms have the same sound, when the latter is duly pronounced and read currently.

* Corner.

HE TRIPPED UP HIS HEELS.

He supplanted him, he took all chance of success from him on the occasion in question; he destroyed his hopes in this case. Hie trippt hope; ijse ij'l's; q. e. in this case, hope being trodden under foot

[destroyed], dread about it [fear and anxiety concerning it] is useless [idle] ; all hope being extinct in regard to this affair, it is useless to think further about it, and we should turn our views towards some other prospect [object]. As a moral it implies when all rational hope has been disappointed in one direction, it behoves us to turn our exertions to another, and never to give way to despair, come what may. Hope, as with us, but sounds up. Hie, hier, here, in this instance. Trippen, trappen, to tread under foot, to trample upon. Ijse, dread, fear, anxiety. Ijl, ijdel, idle, vain, useless. Ijse when aspirated, sounds his. Our term idle is the Dutch ijdel, vain, useless, empty ; an idle man is a useless man ; idle time, unemployed time, and so-useless time. But ijdel is, in the ground, no other than the Latin adjective idolum, ἰδωλον [idol], and we have preserved our pronunciation of the i in idol, in the term idle. It was carried among the then heathen and idolatrous Dutch, by the missionaries who went out from England to convert them in the seventh and eighth centuries ; and who in their zeal for conversion, among their reasoning, mixed a largely proportioned reference to the nothingness, emptiness, insignificance, and vanity of the idol, the object of the heathen's worship : a thing hewn and shaped by his own hand from a worthless material, inanimate, and plainly powerless, therefore a visibly useless protector to have recourse to. And the Latin idolum being the term constantly recurring in these admonitions and instructions, as the object to which the above vilifying epithets and contemptuous appeals were applied by their English instructors, it became in use as an epithet identified with the qualities, imparted by the terms applied to it by the missionaries, was infix'd in the language of the country, and has since returned to us, as the descendants of those low Saxons or Dutch, afterwards established in our country from being its subduers. According to Bilderdijk, this is not the only term incorporated with the low Saxon language, which testifies the conversionary visits of the English missionaries among the people to whom it belongs. JOHNSON perceived the absurdity of the etymologies of this term, as given by JUNIUS and others, and wisely rejects them all, while he merely tells us it is the Anglo-Saxon idel, which is no more than saying idle is idle. HORNE TOOKE sagaciously informs us, he is persuaded the word (as well as to ail,) is grounded in the Anglo-Saxon adlian, adilian, grotare, exaninire, corrumpere, irritum facere; but adlian is simply the dialectically diversified Dutch ijdelen [to empty, to exhaust, to make useless, to take away from, to take out] and formed from ijdel as above explained; and thus like all reference to the Anglo-Saxon dialect as a source of our terms, either a putting the cart before the horse or else an ignorant tit for tat. It is probable our to addle may belong here; but of this in another article. An addled egg is a useless egg; an addled head, an empty or useless head, a head in vain; i. e. the same as none. CHAUCER occasionally spells idel, idil, for idle, and so nearer the true word. But I suspect to ail is from quite another source, and that HORNE TOOKE is wrong in regard to this word every way, as will be explained under to ail.

“ Eternalle God that through thy purveyaunce,
Ledist the world by certaine governaunce,
In idle *, as men saine, ye nothing make.”—CHAUCER.

“ God saith, thou shalte not take the name of thy Lorde
God in vaine or in IDELL *.”—APUD EUNDEM.

“ I praei you let me be all still,
For ye maie well, if that you will,
Your wordis waste in IDILNESSE,
For uttirly withoutin gesse,
All that ye saine, is but in vain.”—IDEM.

* In vain, uselessly, on an unsuitable occasion.

"Behold and se that in the first table
Of hie God, is hestis honourable,
How that the seconde hest of him is this,
Take not my name in IDELNESS amiss."—IDEM.

OBS. The word idole [idol] is found in some of the old French writers under the form of the Dutch ÿdel. The following extract is from an old translation of the Bible into French. Si importeren l' IDLE en la statue Baal hors de son temple, si l'astrent è tut le temple detruiserent, sien firent lungaigne † et despit Baal.*

WHAT IS BRED IN THE BONE WILL COME OUT IN THE FLESH.

That, the source of which is inscrutable, is not easily prevented coming out [appearing] at one time or other [upon some occasion or other]; that which takes its course from an impenetrable recess, is not to be effectually arrested. Wo haet is breed in de bonne, wel kum houdt in de veel lesche; q. e. where mutual malice is rife in a quarter, however frequent the palliatives, it cannot be prevented from breaking out at times; where secret jealousy is mixed up in the society of a certain portion of the community, however frequent the attempts [pains taken] to extinguish or allay it, it is difficult to keep it under [to stifle it]. And thus resolves into a meaning analogous with that of the travesty; but by another direction of sense and form of words, which are however similar in sound, omitting the aspirate in houdt, which then has that of out. Haet, hate, secret, untractable malice, dissimulated desire of revenge. Breed, broad, extended in each direction, wide-spread. Bonne, a street, a particular

* Burnt, from ardoir, the Latin ardere, [ars el feu, the fire burns].

† Dung, a heap of dung or rubbish, from lun, lum, whence the Latin limus, mud, filth.

division of a city; and possibly the origin of bone in Marie-le-bone [Marybonne], as the well-known London district so called. Wel kum, with difficulty hardly, scarcely. Inhouden, houden in, to keep within, to contain, to restrain. Veel, much, frequent. Lessche, as the contracted participle present of lesschen, to quench, to allay, to extinguish, to appease, to repress, to make to leave off or go away; and seems to be connected with the Latin laxare, and lassare, and of course with the French lascher and laisser, and Italian lasciare and lassare, in the ground sense of to set free, to loosen, and to let go; and thus to leave, to leave off, to tire of.

A TOAST.

The modern familiar compliment, as a call to share in the circulating glass; but formerly the jealous challenge of amity and faithful hospitality between the ruder members of a then insecure and precarious state of society. Er toest; q. e. that tries; this proves; that [this] is by way of seeing whether he will accept or not my call on him for his friendship, or giving me safe hospitality while at his board. But the ground sense is the fact of touching [bringing into contact] as the best proof or the surest mode of ascertainment; and of which the mutual touching of the glasses, that was made at the time between the challenger and challenged, was the conventional sign; in those days accompanied by a jealous symptom of security from treachery by the act of holding the unoccupied hand, while they lifted the other to empty the glass. Hence the now familiar and mechanical shake by the hand in sign of either intimate acquaintance, or conclusive affirmative of a bargain or word given. The familiar phrase of to challenge a man, as the festive call for him to fill a bumper to the toast in question, has still survived that state of society, when it carried a truer import of the rough form of which it remains an uncouth sample. So that a toast is simply a surviving remnant of a form by which safety from the host was demanded by the guest, in days when no better pledge for it could be obtained. Toetst, sounds toast, and is the third person singular of the present tense of toetsen, to bring to the touch, to put to the test, to try, to prove, to feel, to try by the feel; and implies rather the evident result, than the actual and material contact of the things in question; and when we say to touch the heart, to touch is then as the travesty of toetsen, in the sense of to try, to prove; for in a literal import it would be nonsense, nay death. But toetssteen [touchstone], though apparently as that which tries by contact, is in its true sense, as that which proves by a natural and peculiar quality, inherent in such kind of stone, and is test-stone. Toetsen is not the source of our to touch, as has been already said in the second preface to this essay, but rather of our to taste, as a modification of to touch, and formerly used directly in that import, as tastare now is by the Italians, and taster [tâter] by the French. The Latin testare in the sense of to prove, to show, to attest, is evidently of a same stock, and so is the term testes, as proving the sex of the species which bears them. JOHNSON, by the place he gives to the term in his dictionary, leaves us in doubt whether he does not impute its source to the Latin tostus [parched, roasted], most probably the real one of toast, as roasted bread; but certainly not of a toast, as that which has been explained above. I am not aware of any other attempt at an etymology for this term, except that made by MR. THOMPSON in his ETYMONS, who brings it out of the Anglo-Saxon agettan [to dédicater, to institute, to consecrate], from which he supposes the form of toasett; but why it should mean toast, or how it came into that shape, he has left us to find out if we can.

That is a stone, that men may well aspien,
 That ilke stone, a God thou wolt it call,
 I rede * the let thine honde upon it fall
 And ~~last~~ [†] it well and stone thou shalt it finde, Sens that thou seest not with thin eyin blinde."

CHAUCER.

TO STALK.

As to walk in an affectedly [unnaturally] upright posture, slowly, stiffly, and gradually, to march with an assumed stateliness, has, I believe, its source in the term stalk, formerly used for the stem of a ladder, when that utensil had but one, across which the steps were fastened, so as to project on each side to serve the mounter of it, and subsequently transferred to the plural number when that was parted into two, between which the steps were then placed athwart. The stalk was used for the ladder itself, and to stalk, to climb [ascend], and so put in use the ladder, the mounting of which necessarily implies an upright, slow, formal, step-by-step manner of going or walking; which manner, when used unnecessarily on ordinary occasions, is evidently an affected and ridiculous manner of proceeding, and in this sense the verb is used.

"With his own hand he made them ladders thre,
 To climbin by the ronges and by the STALKES [†],
 Into the tubbis hanging by the balkes."—CHAUCER.

"I STALKID even unto his backe,
 And there I stode as still as ought."—IDEM.

STALK.

The noun, in the direct sense, as that which supports the fruit or foliage, either in a general or

* Advise, counsell. [†] Touch, feel, try.

† The sides or holdings; notes HORNE TOOKE, in his Diversions of Purley, and Mr. Urry, in his Glossary, explain it, the steps, which are the ronges.

special import, is evidently of a same stock as the Dutch stael, stele, steel, stem, stalk, stick, of which the diminutive would be staelke, as a little stem or STALK. The thema is sta-en, to stand; whence sta-el, stael, as the standing, or that upon which it is stood, and thus the supporter, which a stalk is. Horne Tooke derives the term from the Anglo-Saxon stigan [ascendere], which is the Dutch stei-gen, to mount, and thinks it should be spelt stawk; but how is stalk connected either in sound or sense with that verb? And why should it be written stawk? is it to be found any where under that form? But the phrase a stalking-horse, in the sense of a blind or cover, a concealment, is, I suspect, as the travesty of er staacking hoore's; q. e. in this case a blind [a covering] is requisite [proper, necessary]. Staacking, staaking, as the old form of the participle present of the obsolete verb staucken, staaken, to stake up or round, to block up, to environ, to beset by stakes, to obstruct or prevent the seeing into by that which stops or surrounds; unless, instead of staocking, the original form was staecche hin, and thus as covering in this case, staecche being the contracted form of staocking, and hin, heen, hence; but, either way, it comes to the same thing. Hoore, the contracted participle present of hooren, behooren, to belong to, to appertain to, to be proper for, to behove. 'S, is, is. The l in stalk is paragogical, and introduced merely to lengthen the sound, so as to represent the original pronunciation of the double broad a. Johnson derives the phrase from stalking and horse, and says it is as a horse, real or fictitious, by which a fowler shelters himself from the sight of the game; but does he mean to imply that stalking stands for real or fictitious? or else what does he mean to make of this term? It is a groundless fancy. When however he defines the phrase as a mask, a pretence, it is in a true sense; for the ground import refers simply to a covering or concealing, an obstacle to the being seen; a putting out of sight [view].

"Let the counsellor give counsell not for faction, but for conscience, forbearing to make the good of the state the STALKING HORSE of his private ends."

HAKEWILL ON PROVIDENCE.

"Hypocrisy is the Devil's STALKING-HORSE, under an affectation of simplicity and religion."—L'ESTRANGE.

In Bailey's dictionary, will be found the phrase STALKING HEDGE as a hedge made use of by fowlers to conceal themselves, while lying in wait for their prey; and stalking is there as in stalking-horse explained above.

A STAG.

As the full grown buck or male of the deer-kind; a male deer five years old. In the first year called a fawn, in the second a pricker, in the third a sorel; in the fourth a sore or staggard, in the fifth a stag, as then full grown. And I take the term to be as staect [staak] in the sense of stem, stock, and thus source [producer] of the race; and staect is groundedly the same word with the Dutch and our stock, when in the sense of a race, family, source of descendants [progeny]. So that stag, as stock [progenitor] producer of its race, has the same import as sire in regard to the horse-kind, which I take to be formed in an analogous direction of sense, and to be the travesty of the Dutch saeijer, sower, scatterer of that which produces the sort again, breeder, originator, seminator; also spelt saeder, and then the source of the Latin sator [sower] begetter, [father], and in both forms rooted in saeyen, saeden, to sow, to seed, to scatter [spread] seed. Staect sounds stag, the g and ck intermutating in the utterance. Saeyer sounds precisely as we pronounce sire. When sire is used by us in relation to the head of a social state, it is in the patriarchal import of father of those over whose means of happiness he is appointed to preside; and so it is when the term is used by the French for the same magistrate, and though now become a solecism in language, was not so in its origin and in another form of society. To add the ground themas of staect, stock, and saeyer, so as to connect their various offsets and meanings, would be an over-tedious prolonging of this article. Agrorum sATOR; oleæ sATOR; sATOR hominum atque deorum; omnium rerum pater et sATOR; omnium rerum SEMINATOR et sATOR; SEMINATOR omnium malorum; are all sound phrases, and in a same direction of sense. Serere [sevi, satum] has the import of to produce, to beget, as well as to sow, and is at bottom a same word with our to sire, in the sense of to father, to beget. HORNE TOOKE, the sire of a long race of conundrums, tells us stag is the past participle of the Anglo Saxon stigan, the Dutch steighen, to ascend; and thus as the animal which strikes you at first sight with his raised and lofty head; but this would do better for a giraffe [camelopardalis], or even a camel, and is a mere conceited guess; as a justification of which he has quoted the following line from ARIOSTO,— but what has that to do with a five-year old male deer? His corroborative extract from the Poly-albion is still more vague and irrelevant. JOHNSON observes with a better tact, that the etymology of the term was uncertain to him.

“ E cervi con la fronte alta e superba; ”

“ Say what stock he springs of.”—SHAKSPEARE.

“ Thou hast seen one world begin, and end,
And man, as from a second stock, proceed.”—MILTON.

That staect, staak, should resound into stag, or that the k should intermutate with g, is not an unprecedented instance, even in our own dialect, for to stagger was formerly spelt to staker.

“ The night is wastid and he fell aslepe,
 Full tenderly beginnith she to wepe,
 She rist her up, and dredefully she quaketh,
 As doeth the braunch, that Zephyrus yshaketh ;
 And busht was all in Aragone that cite.
 As colde as any froste now wexith she,
 For pite by the herte strained her so,
 And drede of deth doith her so muche wo,
 That thryis doune she fill in soche a were *,
 She riste her up, and STAKERETH † here and there,
 And on her handis faste lokith she ;
 Alas ! quoth she, shall my handis blodie ‡ ?

WAR.

In the usual sense, is the same word as the Dutch wer, were, weer, weyr, arms, means of defence, and impliedly, of offence also ; whence geweer, armoir, weeren, to ward off, to defend, with numerous other words. War, in the Cimbrian dialect, was lettered oer, but pronounced war. From the most remote antiquity, the terms war, wer, have been used in the Dutch and its collateral dialects, in the sense of confusion, disorder, disturbance, discord ; and is, I believe, to be met with in Melis Stoke's Chronicle. Of equal antiquity in use is also the verb warren, werren, to confound, to create dispute [disorder], to cause contention [confusion], to annoy, to offend ; and the same verb with our old to warray, to warrie, to warre, now to worry. The French guerre, as well as the Italian and Spanish guera, are evidently a same word ; and the Dutch oerlog [state of war] is the same word differently lettered with warlage ; q. e. the state of war, status belli, lage, position, lay, as the past tense of ik

* Confusion, disorder, and at bottom the same word with WAR.—See following article.

† Staggereth.

‡ Are my hands of a kind to commit murder [kill a man] ? am I a woman suited to murder ?

leg, ik lage, from liggen [to repose, to lie down, to lie]. W is a very fluctuating aspirate, and has little or no stability, except where it forms the thema [characteristic syllable or letter] of a word. The Danish and Icelandick Oord, is the Dutch woord, and our word; their Orm and our worm are also one word; and the Dutch oord, oort [a place, a locality] is the same with the Dutch waard [a ward, a quarter, a region]. The Franco-teutonick heimortes, our homewards, is the Dutch huiswaart. The Dutch woeker [usury], is as oecker, increaser, increase, augmenting, from oecken, to increase, to multiply, to add to, whence our to eke, in the same sense, and is the very word used by the old Germans to express the Latin epithet Augustus, in the formula of the title of their emperors. Oorkonde, proof, testimony, is waarkonde, true knowledge, visible proof, certain acquaintance with. Oorlof, leave, is the same with verlof [whence our furlough]. Gedeelen, to judge, to decide, makes the anglo-Saxon ordeelen; in which dialect we also find ordele, urdal, ardal, used interchangeably for trial, and as our ordeal. Wanorde, disorder, is the same with onorde. The Swedish önska, the Danish Onske, is the same verb with the Dutch wenschen, to wish. Want, went, as the preposition used by the earlier Dutch writers, and in the still earlier Franco-teutonick idiom, as equivalent to the present tot [towards, coming counter to, unto] is nothing more than the still older Gothic and, whence the Anglo-Saxon and, still surviving in the Dutch antwoard [whence our answer] as counter-word, or that which was said from the other side to the question. Wippertjen, uppertjen, upperken, [whence our now vulgar nipperkin] a sort of drinking vessel or tumbler, are the same word. The old German orlich is as warlich, warlijk, warlike, contentious, looking war. With us, wer, as confusion, was sometimes spelt where.

" There maie no merchaunt live at ese,
His herte in soche a WHERE* is set,
That it quicke brenneth † for to get."—CHAUCER.

“ Than gan I for to drawe me
Toward the bothum † faire to se,
And Love had gette him in this throwe ||
An othir arowe into his howe,
And for to shottin gan him dresse,
(The arowe’s name was simpleness);
And whan that Love gan nigh me nere,
He drowe it up withoutin WERE †
And shote at me with all his might,
So that this arowe anone right
Throughout myne eigh ¶, as it was founde,
Into mine herte has made a wounde.”—IDEM.

" Full worthy was he in his Lord" is WERRE **
And thereto had he ridden nane more ferre,
As well in Christendom as in Hethness ;
And evir honoured for his worthiness." — IDEM.

"In guerdon ~~th~~ yet of that I have you served,
Beseche I you mine own ladie fre ~~th~~.
That hereupon ye wouldest write to me
For love of Jovis, my right lode sterre,
That death may make an end of all my WERRE ~~th~~."
IDEM.

" Than thought he thus, O blissfull Lord Cupide,
Whan I the processe have in memorie,
How me hast WERRIED §§ [WERRIED?] on every side,
Men might a boke make of it like a storie;
What nede is The to seke on me a victorie,
Sens I am thine and wholly at thy will. IDEM.

* State of anxiety, contention. † Burneth, burns.

¶ Bud, and here as rose bud, and the travesty of the French bouton.

|| Instant, moment. § Hesitation, faltering, dismay.
|| Eve.  War.

† Recompense, indemnity, and evidently the same word with the Italian guiderdone in the same sense, and probably as the Dutch geweerding, from geweeren, to keep harmless, to indemnify.

† Fair; the metathesis of the Dutch frēi, clear, and the same word in the ground with vrij, free, clear, and so void of stain, spot, or mixture; our fre, free, and the Dutch vrij, are the same word.—See vol. 1, p. 118.

III Trouble, strife, confusion, embarrassment.

§§ Worried, attacked.

Our old to warishe, in the sense of to get well, to cure, is evidently the same word with the Italian guarire, and the French guérir, in the same sense; and another instance of the fickleness in regard to letter of the aspirate represented by the form of w.

" Your daughter, with the Grace of God, shall WARISHE and escape. And all were it so that she right now were ded, ye ne ought not, as for her deth, yourself destroy. Senek saith, the wise manne shall not take to grete discomfort for the deth of his children, but certes he should suffer it in patience, as well as he abideth the deth of his owne proper person."—CHAUCER.

The old dutch waerison and the French garnison and our garrison are also one word.

TO HOB-A-NOB.

For two persons to make the glass in the hand of each to touch that of the other, previous to their drinking to each other's health. T'u, ho'p er; nop! q. e. To you! up there [with your glass] touch! it is to you there, I speak, raise your glass, and make it touch mine. A prosopopœia, from the one of two persons, with glasses in the hand, as at a festive board.

B and p interchange in utterance; and p sounded b, makes hobnob of ho'p nop; so that t'u ho'p er nop makes to hob-a-nob. T'u, te u, at you there, to you there, as a call for attention. Ho as the primary form of hoogh, and here as the imperative of hooghen, to raise up, to elevate. 'P, op, up. Nopen, to touch slightly [en passant] and also to notice a matter cursorily.

A RACE.

As in the phrases—a horse-race, a foot-race, a chariot-race, a race between two maggots, a race

* Get well, be cured, probably the same word with the Dutch waeren, to preserve, to keep safe, to save.

against time, &c. &c., and in the sense of a definitely regulated contest or trial (in relation to progress) between the objects named for it. Er rye [ry] 's; q. e. there [in that case] it is a preconcerted order of things [plan, regulation, design ;] what is to be done has been regulated by annexed conditions ; it is there a series of actions [operations] to be performed [accomplished] according to a settled plan ; according to an agreement made before hand. The term has no relation to either swiftness, time, or distance, in its ground sense, but refers merely to a regulated progressive order of things, a predestined [preconcerted] manner of going on. A race may be performed with the speed of the horse, or the crawl of a maggot ; or it may be settled to compete with the swiftness of time itself, or with the slowest perceptible notion, according to the fancy of its institutors. The race of life, is the predestined order of life ; the term [going on] of life as ordained [regulated] by its author or giver, the successive series of the moments [periods] of which the course of life is destined to consist by the will of its giver [provider ;] and rye is here in its ground sense, which is simply that of order, series, regulated progress, a successive series of goings on ; a determinate career. Rije, rye, rij, ry, either as series, order, regulated progress, or as the mechanic's rule [measure is properly rij, the same word with rijge, reeks a line] whence the Italian riga in the same sense ; as well as a large stock of other words in the Latin language, to be noticed elsewhere. Reijs, a turn, a course, vicis, belongs here, and so does reyse, a journey, a stated course. But race as in the phrase race-horse has another source and is the French race, the Italian razza, and the Spanish raza, in the sense of known breed, renowned descent, descended from a stock some of the members of which have been distinguished, noticed, by record, and thus a horse with a pedigree, and race-horse orresponds with the French cheval de race. Of zee in this sense in another page. The French term for race as above explained is course, q. e. a turn, a go, vicis, and thus a stated turn of going. rendre les livres a la course, is, to take books by the turn or time, as is done when we take them from a circulating library. But in the literal sense of course, a race could only consist of one turn or set of goings; but in our sense of race it may, from a ground import, consist of any regulated number of successive turns or sets of goings; and of which in fact it generally so does. Er rye's sounds a race. Op de rye drincken, is, to drink in succession, by turns. JOHNSON derives race (as the contest) from the Islandick ras, a running or going on quickly, but a race may be between maggots produced in the nut, and that can never be very quickly run. In truth the word has no relation whatever to velocity or speed; and JOHNSON's derivation is entirely a guess from similarity of letter. The word imply means a regulated series of doings, and it is either the subauditum or the context which tells the nature or kind of doings. A running, however quick, does not make a race; nor need a race be done by running.

"My RACE of glory run, and RACE of shame."—MILTON.

"An offensive war is made, which is unjust in the aggressor; the prosecution and RACE of the war carrieth the defendant to invade the antient patrimony of the first aggressor, who is now turned defendant; shall he sit down, and not put himself in defence?"—BACON.

"The flight of many birds is swifter than the RACE of any beast."—BACON.

GOOSEBERRY.

As the fruit so called. Goës beere [beyre]; q. e. the berry of the homestead; the spontaneous berry,

* Here used as a trope, and in reference to speed shown by animals when made to compete in that regard.

most commonly cultivated in the land of the desmesne; and as beyre [berry] implied groundedly a succulent fruit with pips [acini], what we now term the gooseberry, was in fact the only spontaneous one worth the cultivating in a culinary view in the orchard or garden of the landholder of those days. In Scotland the gooseberry, is called singly, berry, as the berry, per euphrasin. Goe, goed, guet, in the substantive sense of farm, land, demesne, homestead, the landholder's house and grounds, the demesne lands of a property; property itself and also all kinds of property. Item wie gien burger en is, die en soll ghien GUET op der stad weide staen; q. e. moreover he who is no citizen [freeman] shall have no cattle in the city pasture. Goës is the genitive case of goë. Beere, beyre, bese, besie, a berry [acinus.] A GOOSEBERRY-FOOL, as a common rustick mess of mashed [crushed] gooseberries, is I suspect the traversy of; Er goës beere vulle [volle], q. e. that is a crushing of berries; a mass [composition, mess] of pounded [mashed] berries. Ergoës beere, as above explained. Vulle, volle, the participle present of vullen, vollen, to full, to pound, whence the French fouler, to trample upon, to tread underfoot, to crush, as well as the Latin fullo [fuller]; but not a brightener or cleaner by a mill, as usually taken, but as the one who formerly trampled the cloth while steeping in water, to prepare and cleanse it by so doing, and the word is no derivative, as JOHNSON seems to have supposed, from fulgere. The thema of vollen, vullen, to full, is in vo-en, in the sense of to fold, to double, to complicate, and so to change the order of, to disorder, to tumble, to rumple. And fullo, as a fuller, is termed in Dutch volder, literally folder, rumpler, tumbler, which he is in regard to the means he uses to cleanse the cloth while soaking in water. Hence the Dutch foolen, to tumble about in play, or, as we say, to play the fool with, to have a game at romps [rumplings]; as well as our term fool, formerly fole, as one whose intellects are in a confused disordered state; and folly, in French folie, in Italian folia, I suspect is merely as volle, a disordering, and so a disordered state in reference to the intellect or mind. The French term batifoler, employed by MADAME DE SEVIGNE in the import of to toss about, in reference to hay, as is done in the making of it, is evidently grounded in baten, baeten, to better, to improve, to make profit of; and foolen, to handle, to tumble about, to throw backwards and forwards, or up and down, as is done in haymaking. And is not our to batfowl, in the sense of to catch [ensnare] birds by beating the bushes, and so to disturb them in order to profit by so doing, also another expression grounded in the same terms, applied in another direction of use? Though JOHNSON tells us that batfowling is from bat and fowl! But what does that make? Fowling is not here as bird-hunting, but as fooling, disordering, disturbing, beating; or else the term would be as a bat-hunt! Poor sport compared to the true one. We say, he has committed many follies in his youth, in the sense of he has committed many disorderly acts, has behaved in a foolish [disorderly] manner. The French fou and fol are the same word in the same way the Dutch houden and our to hold are. The French un fol, as a mad man, is as un homme fol, a person in a disordered [deranged] state of mind. And we say he is deranged in his mind, in the sense of he is mad [disordered] in mind.

“Als 't meisje giet met nat Dut is te zeggen: FOOLT mij wat.”—CATS.

q. e. When the maid [miss, girl] pours [throws] the water over you, it is as much as to say, come, let's have a game at romps [come and play with me].

OBS. Batifoler is explained in the dictionaries, to play with one another like children, but evidently so used by a sort of metaphor, and in reference to the sound and original import already given in this article. No writer ever used words in a truer sense, nor with a better taste or feeling of propriety, than MADAME DE SEVIGNE, who employs this word in the meaning above explained.

A SHARPER.

A cheat; one fraudulent in his transactions with others; one who is not to be trusted; one with whom it is dangerous to have any dealings. Er schae hap er; q. e. mischief is what you have to expect there; damage is the fortune that is to be met with in the person there; if you have any thing to do with that person, you have no other luck to expect than damage [than to have the worst of it, to come badly off]. The term has not, as JOHNSON supposes, any relation whatever to sharp, either in the sense of cutting, or in that of acute-minded [sighted]; no deteriorating quality is ever conveyed by that adjective; sharp-sighted, sharp-witted &c., imply nothing derogatory, but the reverse. Sharp pain is any thing but deceitful pain; a sharp cut with a whip is no sham cut. The term is evidently a corruption or travesty; and, I have no doubt, of the above phrase. Er, there, in that person. Schaē, schaede, damage, injury, mischief, misfortune, and the source of our scathe. Hap, a chance, a piece of luck, a snap, a bite, a catch, a happening. Schaē hap, by the double broad-sounding aa, and the sinking of the aspirate h, sounds sharp, as pronounced by us.

“SHARPERS, as pikes, prey upon their own kind.”

L'ESTRANGE.

“I only wear it in a land of Hectors,
Thieves, supercargoes, SHARPERS, and directors.”—POPE.

“He should retrench what he lost to SHARPERS, and spent upon puppet-shows, to apply it to that use.”

ARBUTHNOT.

TO CLEAR STARCH.

To wash linen apparel in water mixed with starch, to stiffen it for the purposes of the wearer. Kleér-stercken; q. e. to stiffen linen cloaths [linen]; to fortify linen, to render it firmer and so more fit to retain its former position; and stercken in that sense has given us our to starch in the sense of to stiffen by the means of starch. Kleér is a familiar contraction of kleeren, kleederen [linen, cloaths, apparel] when used in compound terms for a prefix; as in kleér-lapper, a botcher, a mender of cloaths; kleér-maecker, a taylor; kleér-tobbe, a tub to wash cloaths in, &c. &c. And clear, in this phrase, has no relation to our term clear, the Dutch klaer, whence the Latin clarus, the French clair, and Italian chiaro, as well as the French glaire [the transparent jelly of the egg formerly gleire with us] though we have identified the pronunciation of kleer with that of our own adjective. JOHNSON, in spite of his just understanding of the meaning of the verb, tells us, it is as clear and starch!

“He took his present lodging at the mansion of a Taylor’s widow, who washes, and can CLEAR-STARCH his bands.

ADDISON.

“Unslekid lime, chalke, and “GLEIRZ of an eye t.”

CHAUCER.

* The white of an egg in the raw state, in Italian chiaro, in French glaire.

† Egg, the Dutch eye in the same sense; and our term eye is either as eye-ball, and thus as the egg or the white-ball which contains the pupil or apple in the import of the whole organ; or else the ellipsis of eye-sight, which is as the sight [apple, pupil] of the egg or egg-like ball, the white contained in the socket of that organ. JOHNSON defines the EYE-BALL, the apple [pupil] of the eye. For APPLE OF THE EYE see Vol. I. p. 67, of this essay; and PUPIL OF THE EYE is as its Latin-derived equivalent, and both mean the sight of the eye or eye-sight, that which is held in the ball. Pupil is as pupilla and well accounted for, in AINSWORTH’s Dictionary, by the following extract; “ex pupa, pupula, pupilla, quod intuentibus

A SCAPE-GRACE.

An indefinitely worthless person, one of an incorrigibly perverted disposition; an unfeeling, and consequently hopeless, ruffian; a thorough blackguard. Er's keye 'p gere'e's; q. e. there's wrong-head ready again for any thing! there's the madman again, prepared to do any kind of mischief! Keye is properly a madman, a blackguard, one with a distorted [perverted] mind, and thus one on whom no dependance can be placed, whose actions are under no due regulation of instinct, and so by nature an incorrigible person. The term, in this sense, is grounded in the thema ka-en, ke-en, in the import of to turn, to twist, of which keeren, to turn, is the frequentative form. And we say, his head is turned, and mean he is mad; and also he has a twist in his head, in the sense of he is partially [half-] mad, in which last import the Dutch say, hij heeft een keij in den kop; literally, he has a twist in the head. [Wrong similitudo pupæ redditur:" and thus as the image-reflecting portion [looking-glass] of the eye, and so strictly and manifestly intending a distinct portion from the ball. JOHNSON appears to have been misled by a misconception of the word in the following passage of Shakspeare—

“Be subject to no sight but mine; invisible

To every EYE-BALL else;”

but here EYE-BALL is used figuratively for the whole organ, a part for the whole, and not technically or strictly.

“I feel my hair grow stiff, my EYE-BALLS rowl;”

DRYDEN.

Here it is used in its technical and special meaning; unless the term ball in eys-ball, is as the travesty of behaal; q. e. acquiring, obtaining, reaching in, gathering in, collecting together, taking up, and thus as that part of the eye which takes up [gathers collects] the images of the objects before it, and so the sight of the eye, in the same way that apple of the eye is the seizing or that which seizes the images of things for the eye [see vol. I. p. 67.]; and then another term for the apple of the eye, formed in a same way. Behaels, behaale, the participle present of behaelen, to acquire, to take or gather in, to collect, to obtain, to put together, and sounds as we pronounce ball.

is as wrong, and that which is wrong is twisted or turned aside.] From the same source we have our terms key, as that which is turned round in the lock, and quay [in Dutch kae-kaeye-dijck] as that which is turned towards by vessels, as has, I believe, been before observed. A keystone is as the stone on which the arch is turned. The keys of a harpsichord are as the points on which the tones from that instrument turn, or by which they are turned [changed]. The key of a voice, is as the pitch or point on which all the other notes are turned, [changed, tuned]. The key to a riddle is as that on which its explanation turns, or by which it is turned into its true import. The thema of keye, kaeye, kae, a flint, has quite another import; one that belongs to fire, and has been explained. Er's keye 'p gree's sounds scapegrace.

To escape, to scape, in French échapper, in Italian scappare, in Spanish escapar, in the sense of to get off, to get from or out of, is, I believe, grounded on the Dutch schep, schop, scoop, shovel, spade, as that which takes out, or that by which any thing is taken or gotten out or from, whence scheppen, to draw out, to take out, to scoop, and also schappen, schoppen, to eject, to propel, to take out, to scoop out, turn out, to supplant. So that to scape would be simply as scheppen in the sense of take from or out, and thus to take away or off, and we say he took himself off, in the sense of he took himself away, escaped [disappeared]. To let escape, is to let go out, from, or off. The Dutch schop, has the import of pendulum, regulator, as that which controls the movements of the watch or clock, and in French it is called l'échappement. Schop also means a swing, and schoppen, to swing, to vibrate. The Dutch scop, scoppe, French échappée, escapade, and the Italian scappata, and Spanish escape and escapada, and our scape, in the sense of a prank or evasion, a spirt, a lark, are the same word.

“ No natural exhalation of the sky,
No SCAPE of Nature, no distempered day,
But they will pluck away it’s nat’ral cause
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs.”—SHAKS.

“ A bearne! a very pretty bearne! sure some SCAPE; though I am not bookish, yet I can read waiting-gentlewoman in the SCAPE.”

“ I doubt not but to die a fair death if I SCAPE hanging.”

IDEM.

“ What, have I SCAPED love letters in the holiday time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them ? ”

IDEM.

The Spaniards say escaparse tal o tal palabra, to let such or such a word escape, to tell something inadvertently, and we say, he let the subject [story] out, or let it escape him ; the French, un mot lui est échappé. In other directions of sense the same schep is also the root of another large stock of words.

“ Pece of all charite the *KAY,
Which has the life and soule for to way.”—GOWEN.

TURN HIS HAND TO ANY THING.

As in the expression he is [was] one who can [could] turn his hand to any thing; and in the import of, he can [could] undertake any thing sooner than want [starve], and implying the not being scrupulous as to the means, or in respect to the nature of what is or was to be done, provided it answered his purpose. Teeren is hende toe ene tijding; q. e. vituals and drink are close upon a thriving state; to have enough to eat and drink is not far from being well off in the world ; and implying, provided this is obtained, the manner is of less importance, the first concern is to get this : to which the following distich may be added as the episode.

“ Get money, money, still,
Let virtue follow if it will.”

* The quay, harbour; and so a refuge, place of quiet [safety].

Teeren is here as, to eat and drink, faire bonne chere, to feast, to feed; it has also the meaning of to waste, to digest, to consume, to wear out, when it is the same word with our to tear, in the phrase to wear and tear. Teeren sounds turn. Hende, hard by, near, close to; whence our term handy in the same sense. Handy to a place, is near to a place; ene, eene, one, a. Tijng, as the old form of the participle present of tijen, the same word with tijden, tijghen, and, in the ground, with dijen, dijden, dijghen, to get on, to advance, to thrive, to swell out, to rise, to grow in size, to become greater, as well as with our old to the, in the import of to prosper, to go on well.

“*Ill mote he * THE,
That caused me
To make myself a frere.*

SIR THOMAS MORE'S WORKS.

To die, as the above dijen, is sometimes used in the sense of to fill, to impregnate, to pervade, to saturate.

“*The sote + smell ysprang so wide,
That it DIED + all the place about.*” CHAUCER.

The die, as the stamp or mark on coin, is the participle present of dijen, to advance, to increase, to add value to, to give worth to; and thus as dijng, contracted to dije: de dije is the giving value to, and thus as that which stamps [marks, makes known] the worth of the piece of metal on which it appears, and which piece, without such die or stamp, would have no worth beyond the value of the metal itself: and I suspect, that die, of which dice is as the plural, is no other than the same dije, in the sense of the marks added to the bone or what else is used to make it of, which renders it suitable to its purpose, and without which set of marks the substance would be useless for such purpose. Dice is as dijes, the plural of dije. And is not our old term deis, in French dais, as a throne or state-chair with a canopy, as dije's, q. e. an addition, something more than a common seat or chair, and thus inferring a chair with a canopy or head-piece, which makes it a chair for state occasions, and so advances it to a station above the common chair or seat for ordinary occasions?

* Evilly must he go on, badly must he get forwards.

† Sweet, in Dutch sost. † Saturated, filled, impregnated.

“ This Cambuscan of which I have you told,
 In royal vestiments sit on his deis,
 With diademæ, full high on his paleis,
 And held his feste so royall and so riche,
 That in this world ne was there none it liche.”

CHAUCER.

The thema of dijen, dijden, dijghen, is in de-en, di-en, do-en, in the sense of to do, to act, to effect, as opposed to exist [be] in a state of inactivity, of doing nothing, as we say. Within the long list of terms which belongs to this stock, comes, I suspect, our old word dey, of which dairy is the frequentative form, as the place where farm produce, milk, &c. is improved and extended in utility, by conversion into other forms and states, such as cheese of various kinds, butter, bacon, &c. And our old term dey was as dije; q. e. the doing place, the place where the substance in question was advanced to other stages of improvement; and milk, or farm produce, was the substance [material] understood [inferred] by usage; for all nouns, as has been repeatedly observed, are necessarily ellipses; and dey or dairy is used as a noun.

“ No deinty morcil passed through her throte,
 Her diete was accordaunt to her cote *,
 Repletion ne made her nevir sike,
 A temperate diete was all her phisike,

* Cottage, hut, farm-house, the Dutch kot.

And exercise, and hert * 'is suffisaunce,
 The gout ne let † her nothing for to daunce,
 Ne apoplexie ne shent ‡ not her hed ;
 No wine drank evir she, ne white ne red.
 Her borde was most servid with white and blacke,
 Milk and broun bred, in which she fonde no lack,
 Seinde § bakon ¶, and sometime an eye  or twey,
 For she was as it were a manir day ††." CHAUCER.

From dijen, dijden, in the sense of to cause progressive aggrandisement and amelioration, to promote amplitude as well as prosperity in regard to the subject in question, promovere in majus sive melius, augere motu quodam interiori, we have taken, I have little doubt, our old diete, now deity, in French deité; which term I take to be simply as dijde, the promoting cause, the aggrandizing [the advancing, bettering, improving] cause, and thus the promoter [effector, causer] of good, the author of all human welfare and happiness; and dijde sounds as our old diete [deity], the y being the usual substitute for the old participle contraction e for ing. The Latin deus, dius, divinus, as well as the Greek θεος, θεος, θεοντος, διος, are also scions of this stock. Deus, θεος, as dije [the participle present of dijen], used as a substantive with a latinized or greeked termination, expresses the source [author, beginner] of good, of greatness, of improvement, of advancement, of prosperity, of happiness, the perfecter or perfectioner of all that is, the being from whom all efficiency of existence, as far as human perception extends, has proceeded. Deus has been derived by others from θεομαι, I contemplate, I look at, and

* Content of heart [mind].

† Hinder.

‡ Damaged, injured, hurt, in Dutch schondt.

§ Singed, scalded.

¶ Bacon, the old Dutch baken, backs, baeck, as baecken-veelch, in the same sense.

 Egg, as the Dutch ey, eye, now ei.

†† Farmer, dairy-man, one who subsists by turning the produce of the land, and that which subsists on it, to his use.

so I overlook ; but that carries no grounded [inherent sense] of either good or bad result ; and might serve for a mere looker on, without interference one way or the other. The word has also been derived from $\tau\theta\eta\mu\iota$, pono, and thus as positor, but to that the foregoing objection applies as strongly as to $\theta\eta\mu\alpha\iota$. But dijen implies to serve with effect, to do essential service, to better, to promote the good and welfare indefinitely.

“ Then whan thou goest thy body fro,
 Fre in the ayre thou shalt up go,
 And levin all humanite,
 And purely live in DIETE *
 He is a fole withoutin were †,
 That trowith have his countrey here.

Diet, in the sense of regimen in food, rule for bettering health, evidently belongs here ; as does DIET, in the sense of an assembly of those who are empowered to better the state of the public affairs of their departments.

A RAKE

As one in constant pursuit of vicious practice ; one recklessly abandoned to the pursuits of sensuality, is, I suspect, the ellipsis of A RAKE-HELL, which is as er reke hell; q. e. by him hell is replenished ; by such as he, hell gathers together ; by his like hell recruits its stock of inhabitants. Of the import of the term Hell, it has already been spoken in the first volume of this work, at pages 85, 86. So that, according to that view of the word, the sense of the phrase a rake-hell, would be one who by his pursuits and practices, gathers up [lays up, provides] a store of remorse for his mind [conscience], and thus a hell for himself.

* As a divinity, that is in happiness, in prosperity, in ever-during good.

† Defence, as the Dutch were, in a same sense.

The term rake is also used in a milder or secondary import, for one who evinces an eager propensity to out-of-home amusements and diversions, and may be then applied even to a female. Reke sounds rake, and is the third person present of the potential mood of the verb reken, reecken, reycken, raeken, regghen, to rake, to gather together, to collect; hence our to reach, both in the sense of to stretch out after, and also of to touch [attain]. Rick and riches belong here as extent of means, or means by which personal influence is extended. HORNE TOOKE derives rake [the tool] from the Gothic rikgan, but rake is simply the Dutch reke in the same sense and sound, and rikgan [congerere, colligere] is merely reken in another but collateral dialect, called Gothic, and one no more the source of Dutch words than Anglo-Saxon is of English words. In this source Mr. TOOKE also includes a rack of hay and a rick of hay, but who ever heard of a rack of hay? Rick is also spelt reek, reke, and is grounded in riecken, to smoke, to send forth vapour, of which it is as the participle present, and refers to that process which takes place more or less in regard to every considerable accumulation of fresh hay or grass. JOHNSON derives rake, as the profligate, from the French rdcaille, rascaille, refuse, rubbish, trumpery, and also mob, as the refuse of society, and formerly in use with us under the shape of raskail in the same sense; to which he adds the Dutch rekel, dog; but how is rake as one abandoned to vicious pursuits, to be got out of either rubbish, mob, or dog? But raskail, as poor stuff, and so the trope for poor people, I take to be as raskaal; q. e. bare as satin [silk], or silk-bare; and thus as poverty itself; for what barer or more naked than the surface of satin [silk]? The term has no connection with RASCAL, already accounted for in the first volume. Ras, silk, satin, kaal, bare, poor, without any thing.

"Sithin all the grettist clerkes han had ynough to don, and as who saith gathered up clene to forne hem, and with ther sharp sithes of conning al mowen, and made therof grete REKES* and noble, ful of al plenties to fede me and many anothir."—CHAWCER.

" But for to make short my tale,
And not to tary longe,
He ordeynid him ther a quest
Of his own men so strong.
The false Justice and the Sheriff
Bothe were hongid hie,
To weyvyn ther with the ropis,
And with the windre drie.
And also the twelve Sisouris †,
Sorrow have that REKK ‡;
All they werin yhongid
Full faste by the nekk."

CHAUCER.

" This ilke monke let old thingis to pace,
And heldin after the new world the trace.
He gave not of the text a pullid hen §,
That saith that hunters be not holy men,
Ne that a monke, whan he is RECHELESS ¶,
Is likenid till a fish, that is waterless:
This is to say, a monke out of cloystre,
This ilke text yeeld he's not worth an oystre."

IDEM.

" Suche fine hath lo! this Troilus for love,
Suche fine hath all grete worthinesse,
Suche fine has his estate royal above,
Suche fine his lust, suche fine his noblesse,
Suche fine has this false world 'is brotilnesse,
And thus began his loving of Creseide,
As I have tolde, and in this wise he deide.

O yonge and freshe folkis, he or she,
In which that love upgrowth with your age,

* Heaps, ricks, masses. † Assessors, Jurors.

‡ Sorrow befall those who care about it [rack, pain, torment, themselves about their being hung]. Rekk is sometimes written to recks; but is there as recken, to stretch out, and so to rack, and then to pain or torment. Hence reckless and recklessness, as without pain or care, and so careless, thoughtless.

§ A sick hen; a hen with the pip. Pullid as puling, connected with French piauler, piailler.

¶ Abandoned, free from care or thought in regard to consequences.

Repairith home from wordely vanite,
 And of your hertes up castith the visage
 To thilke God, that after his image
 You made, and thinkith al n'is but faire,
 This world that passith sone, as flouris faire.
 And lovith him, the which that right for love
 Upon a crosse, our souls for to bey,
 First starfe * and rose, and sit in heven above,
 For he n'il falsin no wight dare I sey,
 That wol his hert al wholly on him ley ;
 And sens he best to love is, and most meke,
 What nedith fainid loves for to seke ?
 Lo ! here of painims † cursid olde rites !
 Lo ! here what al their Goddis may avail !
 Lo ! here this wretchid world's appetites !
 Lo ! the fine and guerdon for travaile
 Of Jove, Apollo, Mars, and such RASKAILE ! †
 Lo ! here the forme of olde clerkis speche
 In poetrie, if ye ther bokis seeche ! " CHAUCER.

DOWN ON HIS MARROW BONES.

As in the expression, he must be brought down on his marrow-bones, and implying he must be made to repent of it in earnest, he must not be trifled with but fairly made to feel regret. Doe hun aen ijse, maere rouw bij hoon's; q. e. bring terror into him; for that repentance follows disgrace is a mere fable; inspire him with dread, don't trust to the mere effect of shame upon him. A half jocular form of recommending the person in question should be made to feel something beyond the mere exposure of his fault. Doe aen, as the imperative of aendoen, to bring on, to inspire, to inflict. Ijse, horror, dread. Maere, mare, a fable, a mere story, not to be relied on. Rouw, repentance, grief. Hoon, disgrace, shame, infamy. JOHNSON says marrow-bones is a burlesque term for knees. But what has knee, which is simply the

* Died, as the Dutch sterfe, sterft, stervd, in the same sense: sterfbed is deathbed; sterflijk, mortal; sterfie, mortality.

† Heathens, pagans.

‡ Rubbish, worthless stuff, of no value, mob.

bend between the leg and thigh, to do with marrow-bones? This groundless conception of the meaning has wholly sprung from the expression upon his knees implying submission; a sense somewhat analogous to that in which the above expression carries in use. S' is, is. Hun, him, or them. Doe hun aen ijse sounds, down on his; maere-rouuw, sounds marrow; bij hoon's sounds bones.

A boon; a favour, a grace, a benefit; as when we say, the boon was granted; he asked it as a boon; &c. &c.; Er by hoon; q. e. there by favour [grace, consent]; by having the sense of at hand, present, the expression amounts to the inclination or favour being there in the person of the granter of the favour asked. Hoon, hone, favour, grace, vote. Bij hone sounds, bone, and so boon was formerly spelt by us. I suspect, the term bonny, q. e. well-favoured, graced with a pleasing aspect belongs here. Boon was not only spelt bone, but also, at times bene. The Latin terms, bona, goods [favours of fortune], bonum, a blessing, bonus, kind, favourable, as well as in all the other senses to which these words have been extended by use evidently belong here; and the y of the preposition by accounts for the u in the Italian and Spanish buono and bueno, the older or rustick form of bonus, surviving in the present Italian. As the form of our antiquated bene does in the Italian bene, the Latin bene. An Italian says, va bene, for, it goes on favourably; just as could be asked [desired]. Eh bene! for granted, admitted, what then? Linguisque animisque favete: nunc dicenda bona, sunt bona verba, die. In bonis aut perditis rebus. Bonisque rebus agit laetum convivum. Bonus nuncius, &c. &c. are sound expressions in which the word as explained includes the idea of favour, good will, kind inclination. Bene tibi in animo volo; I wish you well from my heart. Boon, the adjective, in the import of jovial, merry, liberal, hospitable, is as one of a temper or disposition favourable to society, social intercourse; and such is a BOON companion. And the sound and old term of the BONES, for dice, is, I suspect, as the travesty of die bij hone's; q. e. all this is a matter of favour [luck]; every thing here is mere favour [luck], all that is done by these playthings, is to decide favourably or unfavourably between those who are using them for that purpose. Luck, from the very nature of the word, includes uncertain fortune [event] and thus either a good or a bad, a favourable or an unfavourable issue, and is in fact in itself no other than a happening, a taking place, a coming to pass. The term the bones, as dice, can have no relation to bone, as the substance [material] commonly implied by that word, for dice may be made of any suitable substance, and the nature of the material has no share in the origin of the term. To play at dice, is to play at hazard; to play a game of chance, its players are as sequentes ateam non rationem. To set all upon a die, is to set all upon luck, favourable or unfavourable as it may turn up.

“ Plaeebo came, and eke his frendis sone
And aldir first, he bad of them Δ BONE, *
That none of them none argumentes make Agenst his purpose that he hath ijtake.”

CHAUCER.

“ For Godd' is love I bide the \dag A BONE
To let me alone, and it shal be thy best.”

IDEM.

“ And when the mele was sackid and ybound,
This John goth out and fynt his horse awey;
And gan to crie, harrow and welaway!
Our horse is lost, Alein, for Godd' is \ddag BENES,
Step on thy fete, come forth || atenes.”

IDEM.

“ Sevin is my chaunce, and \S thin five and thre,
By Godd' is armis, if thou false plaiie me,

* A.favour, grace.

\dag The same as before.

\ddag Favors, blessings.

|| At once.

\S Thine, your's.

This daggir shall thorough thine harte go.
 This fruct comith of thilke * bones two,
 For swearing, ire, falsness, and homicide. CHAUCER.

“ But then my study was to cog the dice,
 And dextrously to throw the lucky sice :
 To shun ames ace that swept the stakes away ;
 And watch the box for fear they should convey False + bones, and put upon me in the play.”

DAYDEN.

DOG.

As a reproachful term for a despicable man. The ellipsis of doghe-niet [deugh niet] ; q. e. a worthless person, a villain, an abandoned person ; one lost to all sense of virtue, un vaurien, un coquin, nequam, furcifer, prostigatus. Deughen, doghen, to be of value, to be worth ; and doghe, as the participle present of doghen, and thus being worth. Niet, nothing. Could it enter the human head to make dog [as the animal] the trope of human villainy, human worthlessness ? The most useful, watchful, faithful, sagacious, endearing, and popular, of the living kinds among us. A dog the type of human villainy ! This is more like libelling language than using it to its intended purpose. We say a man is a beast, but that is in the general sense of a being without intellect, a mere being, the beast kind, simply a living existence or being ; and implies no villainy or general depravity. Formerly beast [spelt best], with the epithet reasonable, was used in the same sense as we now do the phrase a reasonable being, as a human being.

* Dice, as the decider of good or evil luck [favourable or unfavourable turns].

† This whole extract is quoted by JOHNSON under the head bones, as belonging to bones in the usual sense, in which he probably believed the term bones to be used, and they as implying playthings made of that material.

“ I know the infirmity of our family ; we play the boon companion, and throw our money away in our caps.”

ARBUTHNOT.

“ I never heard a passion so confus’d,
Se strange, outrageous, and so variable,
As the dog * Jew did utter in the streets.”—SHAKS.

“ Mayest thou not tel than what thing is a man? Askest thou not me (quoth I), wheither that I be a resonable mortal best? I wote well and confess that I am it.”

BOKE OF BOETHIUS APUD CHAUCER.

A BONE OF CONTENTION.

As when we say, I foresee that will be a bone of contention among them, and meaning a subject of dispute between them. Er by hoon af, kome tene sij aen; q. e. all chance of favour being off, irritation [anger] introduces itself among them; all chance of the affair being settled by good-will between them, anger [ill-will] is engendered among them. Bij hoon, by favour, kind inclination, kindly feeling, as explained in the penultimate article. Aen komen, komen aen, to come on, to approach, to grow up, to produce, to appear; of which kome is as the third person of the present tense in the potential mood, and sounds con, the m and n being proximate sounds, and frequently interchanging; con and the Latin cum are the same word in composition; merry-thought, was originally neere-toght, &c. &c. Tene, participle present of tenen, teenen, tanen, to irritate, to provoke. Sij, them. Aen, on, upon. So that kome tene sij aen, sounds contention.

IT BROKE NO BONES.

Said of some transaction which was completed at once [off hand], something done as a matter of course, and consequently without formality or compliment; no favour being asked or wanted, it left the parties as they were before in relation to each other! ‘Et broke nob by hoon’s; q. e. that which is the custom can hardly be said to be a favour [when complied with]; a usage can scarcely be deemed a grace [when followed]. The expression serves in relation to parties who have been accidentally brought into communication with each other upon no other grounds than that of some matter of business, about which the right on one side was so manifest, it was complied with as of course, and so ended the communication without ceremony. Broke, custom, usage, [koren ende broken, leges et consuetdines unwritten law, tradiionary rule]. Noð, noode, not easily, hardly, scarcely. By hoon, as above explained. 'S, is, is.

* Villainous, worthless.

HE MADE MY HAIR STAND ON END.

He drove me to my wit's end ; he brought me to the highest degree of exasperation [bitter feeling, either of anger or dread]. Hie meid met heere's taend aen end ; q. e. at times even the handmaid herself is at last provoked by domineering ; in some instances the female slave [captive] herself is roused into anger [incensed takes fire] at the harsh treatment of the master. Implying something done or said by the one in question, on the occasion referred to, so outrageous and insufferable, that it had in spite of all forbearance, excited the utmost alarm [resentment] in the breast of the witness [or else sufferer]. Hie, hier, here in this case. Meid, maid, girl, young female, also a handmaid; a female slave, captive, bondswoman ; with us maid, in Anglo-Saxon maed, in Icelandick mey, in Gothick magath and mawi, in Turkish and Persian maad or madsch, as a general term either for a woman or female creature indefinitely. The Egyptians use the term neit in this sense. Meid is properly in a relative import, or as an adjective quality, and as the antiquated gemeid, fair, decorous, properly, gemoooid, from mooi, used in the sense of pretty, fair, clear, spotless, but originating from the Eastern [Asiatick] term moym, in Coptic mooi, q. e. water ; from which word Moses derived his appellative distinction, as the water-foundling, the infant found floating on water. Maagd, as maid, in the sense of virgin, and so a state of maidenhood, is probably as maght, macht, potentia, id quod possit, and thus as the extent of her sexual share in the reproduction of her species; in the same way that kunne, sex, springs from the thema ku, generare, producere, gignere, and is as kunning, potentia, to which stock belongs also kennen, kennen, to be able, formerly to can with us. Hence in a like direction of sense, the technical import of our terms impotent, impotence, impotency. Maagd formerly was applied to one of the age of puberty of either sex; and as grounded in maacht, carries simply the import of puber, cui natura pubertatem dicat existere. Meē, mede, mede, met, with. Taend, getaend, as the participle past of taenen, tanen, tenen, teenen, to irritate, to provoke. Heere, as the participle present of heeren, heerien, to domineer, to lord it over, to use an imperious tone or conduct; and the source of heerschen, to domineer over, to use harshly, to behave imperiously, and thus provokingly, vexatiously, and so to exhaust either the moral forbearance or the physical power or means; whence, I suspect, the French harasser and our to harass, to tire out, to vex to exhaustion, to fatigue the patience by exciting means. The verb is grounded in heer, master, lord, overlord, superior, and the same word with the Latin herus, and once in use with us in the same import. Aen end, on end. In the travestied and modern form, the sentence is sheer nonsense; whose hair ever stood on end?

" For he was aftir traitour to the toun
 Of Troy, alas! thei quritte him out to rathe ;
 O nice world, lo thy discretion !
 Creseide, which that nevir did 'hem scathe,
 Shal nowe no lengir in her blisse bathe,

But Antenor, he shal come home to toune,
And she shal out, thus said both HEERE and houne.

* Explained by all the glossarists as hare and hound. But how will that construction of the phrase apply in regard to the inhabitants of a city? What can the hare and hound have to do here? Surely such a solution is the climax of glossarial absurdity! I take heere to be as the above heere, heer in the sense of lord [superior], one of whom vassals hold, the head of the homage, and houne as participle present of houen, houden, the holding the vassals, the tenants, the then holders in servitude, bondsmen; or in the sense of persons attached, dependant upon, holding or retaining from, friendly, well inclined to; and thus in either sense as the high and low, the great and their retainers or dependants, and so every body in the town, inhabitants of all degrees and ranks. Heer-houd, heer-houw [hou], is a term for the lord [master] and his retainers, those attached [bound] to him; the chief and his dependants. Houde, holde, hulde, is the homage, the people who compose the homage of the lord of the superiority, the vassals, now called tenantry. Houd, hold, huld, is also obsequious, observant, faithful. Houden, gehouden, is beholden to, bound to, obliged to, tied down to. And our term GOOD-MAN has, I suspect, its now derogatory and vilifying import, from its being the travesty of gehoud-man, as bondman, vassal, feudal slave, one belonging to the homage of the superior or lord of such holding. Both the original and travesty have a same sound, and good is not used ironically in this phrase, as JOHNSON gratuitously supposes, but is used in its true sense, which was that of a man of inferior station. My good man is never used but as an insulting assumption in the mouth of the purse-proud and arrogant upstarts to those from whom they trust they shall not receive their due chastisement in return. When it was used in its proper place and in its fair but now obsolete sense, the term implied simply a boor, or one employed in the agricultural service of another, a sense, however, arising out of its original import of vassal, bondman. I have little doubt the low Latin term homagium, in French hommage, with us homage, is grounded in the old Dutch hou, houw, hof, as the hailing [encouraging] shout, the welcoming hail; whence houden, holden, hulden, obsequium et fidem prestare and, hulde, obsequium et observantia clientis sive vasalli. Unless in a somewhat analogous sense it springs out of homme, as the participle present of hummen, hommen, bommen, to buzz, to resound, and is thus as the buzz, or resounding noise of the shouts or acclamations used in receptions and inaugurations by subjects or dependants.

"Call my Sovereign yours
And do him HOMAGE as obedient subjects."

SHAKSPEARE.

"Go, go, with HOMAGE your proud victors meet!
Go, lie like dogs beneath your master's feet."

DRYDEN.

TO HURRY.

To excite painfully into a quicker than the natural or habitual action ; to hasten painfully ; to excite into hasty uncalled for motion by either moral or physical torment [spuriously] ; and also to act or go on as one excited by such stimulus. I suspect, the same verb with te horren ; q. e. to strike against, to push on or against, to offend or injure, to hurt, to goad, to stimulate, to stick, to prick, to puncture ; and the same word with horten, hurten, whence our to hurt ; and springing from the thema hor, whence, hoorn, horn, as that with which it is stuck or pricked, and horze, spur, as well as our term horse, as the ellipsis of horze-dier ; q. e. spur-animal, the creature for which the spur is used to excite into the requisite action. JOHNSON derives the word from the Anglo Saxon hergian, to plunder !

"Your nobles will not hear you, but are gone
To offer service to your enemy ;
And wild amazement HURRIES up and down,
The little number of your doubtful friends."

SHAKSPEARE.

"Stay these sudden gusts of passion,
That HURRY you away."

ROWE.

In a secondary sense the verb to hurry, as to go on with heedless haste, with unnatural haste, is to go on as one who is pricked, excited on, made to go by striking or painful feeling indefinitely.

"Did you but know what joys your way attend,
You would not HURRY to your journey's end."

DRYDEN.

G 2

TO BROOK.

“ He could not brook the affront,” he could not bend [submit, yield] to the affront; he could not let it pass over [stoop to it], he was not inclined to yield [bow] to it, to put up with it. Brooken; q. e. to bend, to incline, to bow, to stoop, and so to give way to, to let pass by, to yield to. Hence our Sailor’s term of to broche to, used when the ship, on being struck by a wave sternwards on the side, swerves, bends or turns the bow towards the direction whence the blow came, and thus yields [gives way] to the shock; ch, as is well known, had formerly the sound of k with us; church, chirch, and kirk are one word. A brooch, as an ornament, a jewel, also belongs here, being formerly the collar to which the jewel was appended, as in those of the different orders of knighthood, and was then as that which was held by, that which was bent or went round the neck, as a collar does; and so does brook, as naturally flowing water, that which bends from its rise into a circling, serpentine, or bending course; and how else is the springing water to depart from it’s level and find it’s means of flowing? JOHNSON tells us the term is as the Anglo-Saxon broc, broca; but that is only another form of the spelling of the same word in another dialect of a same language, and not the source of our term. HORNE TOOKE tells you the word is grounded in the Gothick and Anglo-Saxon brikan, brecan, bræckan, to break; but why is a brook a break? Till it becomes a brook, it is a fountain, a rising up, a springing up, an issuing out, and is no brook, till it turns [swerves] from that direction and takes its bending or winding course. A mere whim! and indeed his own extracts or vouchers prove his misconception of the word itself. For instance, his quotation from Vis. P. PLOUGHMAN.

And so boweth * furth by a BROKE † beeth buxome ‡ of spech, till you fynden a forde; your fathers honourable. Wade in that water and wash you well there."

not

not ned er;

to our on de,

ion

.

ly

rly

re

so

he nt

ch

he

as its

e;

m

os

;

ne

e, re

d

;

a

,

;

g

s

;

i

" Underneath the ground,
In a long hollow the clear spring is bound,
Till on yon side where the morn's sun doth look,
The struggling water breaks || out to a BROKE.
BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER.

Brooken, broken, to bend from, in, or out; to form a curve, to bow or bend indefinitely, and so to bow or bend round; whence broke, broocke, breucke, as the participle present.

" Full sodainly his herte began to cold,
As he that on the coler § fonde within
A BROCHE, ¶ that he Creseide yeve at morowe,
That she from Troie toun must nedis twin **
In remembrance of him." CHAUCER.

" Of small coral about her neck she bare,
A paire of bedis gaudid alle with grene,
And thereon hong a BROCH ¶ of gold full shene ††."—ID.

Obs. The Dutch term broeck, as marsh, stagnant water, has nothing to do with our term brook as above explained. Broeckland, is marsh-land.

* And so conform yourself [bend, incline yourself], according to the way [after the example] of the brook; be inclinable [yielding, pliant] in your discourse [give way to others, don't be too unbending and positive]. So that brook is here as the type of flexibility, pliancy, bending, or bowing; and bowing is bending. † Brook, rivulet, stream.

† Bending, obedient, and the same word with the Dutch bieghsaam, booghsaam, buighsaam, conformable, pliant, flexible, obedient, humble, submissive, from bieghen, booghen, buighen, to bend, to bow. A buxom lass, is a compliant lass, one ready to oblige you.

|| That is, water springs out and becomes a meandering [winding, bending] stream. It is not as brook, the water breaks out; it breaks out first and then becomes a broke [brook], winding rivulet.

§ Collar, in French collier. ¶ Jewel, ornament.

 Depart, separate in two.

†† Shining, resplendent, as the contracted participle present of schijnen, to glitter, to shine, fulgere, nitere, if it is not as schoon, handsome, beautiful, pretty.

BROKEN.

In the phrases, broken victuals, broken bread, broken meat, &c. &c., as the bits or fragments of each, after the rest has been used at meals, is, I suspect, as, brocken; q. e. fragments, lumps, bits, pieces, clots, the plural of brocke, frustrum, frustulum esculentum, a lump, a fragment, a piece, a parcel, a breaking. Hence brocken, brokken, to break into lumps, to break into parts [pieces]. Niet hebben om in de melk te brokken, literally, not to have wherewith to put into your milk [porridge], is said in the import of, to be in a state of great poverty. To sing broking, was used formerly in the sense of to sing by parts, by bits, by pieces at a time, in partitions, breaks and variations in the tune.

“ Fro day to day this jolly Absolon,
 So woith her, that him was we begon.
 He wakith all the night, and all the day,
 He kembeth * his lockes brode, and made him gay,
 He woith her by menis and brocage,
 And swore that he woulde ben her owne page ;
 He singith BROKING † as a Nightingale,
 He sent her Piment, Methe, and spicid Ale ;
 And wafris piping hote out of the glede § ;
 And for she was of toan, he proff'rid mede ¤,
 For some folk will be wonnian for rychesse,
 And some for strokese, ¶ and for gentilnesse.”

CHAUCER.

* Combs ; to comb, in Dutch kammen, kammen.

† By catches, in parts, by passages, by variation of tunes ; as the nightingale does ; not as MR. URAY surmises with a broken or cracked voice.

‡ Embers, hot ashes, pruna, as the Dutch gloed, in the same sense.

§ Reward, money.

¶ Caresses, pawing about ; also flattery, adulation ; and is as the plural of the participle present of the Dutch strooken, in the import of strijcken, streeken, to smooth down, to paw with the hand gently, to caress, to wheedle, to flatter, to stroke down with the hand.

Obs. Broken, as in the phrase, a broken voice, une voix cassée, is in the direct sense of not whole, unentire, in a broken state, and as the participle past of to break.

BROKEN.

As in the phrases broken-hearted, broken-spirited, broken down horse, broken-kneed horse, &c. &c.; is, I suspect, as the past participle of broocken, broken, as explained in the article to brook at page 84, and thus, in the first instance, a bowed down [subdued, bent down] heart, spirit; as applied to a horse, one which is bent down [sunk] under the work [task] done; and in relation to the knee of a horse, as that which is bowed or preternaturally bent [projecting]. We say in an opposite direction, he is a man of inflexible, unyielding, unbending temper. To break in, to break in business, is as in the Dutch breken, to fail, to be wanting in, to be deficient in, of which the past participle is gebroken, broken.

HE BROKE HIS NECK.

He fell from his horse and broke his neck; he fell from the top of the house and broke his neck; are expressions where no more is implied than that he came to his death by such falls. Hie broke his necke; q. e. in this case [here] turning aside is killing [death]; here, inclining the wrong way is the occasion of being killed; here, overbending [too much bending] causes death; and in fact if the one in question had not turned off the place in question or inclined from the direction he was in, he would not have been killed; if he had kept his place and due position he would have been alive, instead of dead. The breaking the neck has no more to do in the case than breaking his skull or any other part of him. It is not even easy to conceive how a neck is to be broken, in the literal import, by a fall. To break the neck, as in the case of hanging, or of a fowl, is to stretch it, to draw it out, and as, toe berecke, die necke; q. e. over stretching [over drawing, too much extension, too great a stretch] this kills. Hie, hier, here. Broke as the participle present of brocken, broken, to incline one way, to bend aside, to bow, to turn from the straight direction [the right direction] and thus as an inclining away from, a bending from, a turning off. Necke, the contracted participle present of necken, to kill, to slay [whence the Latin necare], and thus a killing, and so a death. Toe, too, in the sense of over, beyond, into the bargain, over and above. Berecken, bereijeken, recken, reijcken, to stretch, to extend, to lengthen, whence our to reach. Verrecken, verreijcken, is, to strain, to stretch too far, to wrench; ver, as over, and the prefix be, have, in some cases, an equivalent import, be being at bottom the same word with by, by, close. He broke the neck of the business, has been explained in the first volume of this essay. Neck, in its regular import, is as the Dutch neck, nick, nack, nek [in German genick] grounded in an adjective sense, and from the thema ne-en, ni-en, to incline, to bend, and thus as bending, and the term is as neck-bone [joint], and thus the joint that bends the head or at which it bends. Hence also nigen, niigen, to bow, to incline, knikken, nicken, to nod, to wink, and the German genick.

THE BREAK OF DAY.

As the point at which day comes out; the earliest period of the day; the entrance of the day into existence. Die bij reke af d'ee; q. e. this by rule [regulation, disposal] from eternity; what now takes place is the order [combination, enchainment] of things from eternity [by the direction of the eternal being]; and implying the principal and never failing phenomenon in the combination [order] of things; a chief and certain appearance ordained in the course of nature by the Author of all. So that the expression, independent of the importance and universally inspiriting consequence of the phenomenon referred to, denotes it, as per euphrasin, for the most manifest exemplification of the unfathomable duration and unfailing design in the system presented for our use and contemplation. As sure as the sun will rise to-morrow, is as certainty guaranteed by an unbroken confidence in the designer of that system. In its literal form the break of day would have no meaning except the want of day, and that a strained one, and by taking break as brek, bresse, bresche, a defect, a deficiency; whence the French breche, and our own breach, and the Italian breccia, in the same sense; or else as berke, a fracture, a rupture, an infraction. But that is not what is meant by the phrase, the original of which expresses adequately the cause and the indispensableness of this all important phenomenon, at the same time agreeing in sound and sense with the travesty. I suspect, in the phrases his day is [will] come, he has had his day, the term day is the travesty of d'ee, as destined duration, ordained course, regulated space of time. Eë, eeu, euwe, is the oldest form the Dutch has in the import of time, as eternity, unscanned, immeasurable duration, a going on without beginning or end. Whence the Latin ævum, and our age. In course of use the word acquired the import of law, rule, regulation, order, in relation to that law of Providence by which all things have been and are regulated, the rule [law] of nature, the rule by which the universe is governed and held together under One; and subsequently resolved into that of the law or regulation enacted by man for the ordering of society, for which wet is the modern substitute. The old form of the saying "nood breckt wet;" q. e. necessity breaks law, or as with us, necessity has no law, was formerly nood brecht EE. Our old ay in the import of ever, eternally, for ever, is the same word as the above ee, and by its form of travesty substantiates that of day in the above phrase as d'ee.

“O Martyr crowned in virginite,
Now mayst thou singe following AY * in one
The pure white Lambe celestial.” CHAUCE.

To shew the race of words which spring from hence would be too round-about for this article. Of the source of the word DAY, in its regular sense, in another page. Reke, reek, reghe, direction, disposition, rule, order.

“Of Laodamis is written thus,
That when at Troie was slain Proteselaus,
No lengir n'olde she live after his DAIE †.”—CHAUCE.

“His sonne which that hightin † Balthasare,
That helde the reign after his father's DAIE ‡.”

IDEM.

A HOUSEBREAKER.

In the usual sense of the robber of the mansion, the family dwelling. Er huys bij wreke'r; q. e. in this case the family is extorted from [laid under contribution]; this is an instance where the inhabitants of the house [family] become the subjects [objects] of extortion [exaction, rapine]. Huys, either as the mansion, or its inhabitants; as when we say the whole house was in an uproar, when house means evidently the inhabitants, and not the walls. Wreke, as wreking, the old form of the participle present of wreken, wreycken, to extort, to wrench from, to wring out; unless the original had wreck, whence our wreck, in the place of wreke, and thus the house was made a wreck of, was laid waste; but, I suspect, the first given sense was the true one. The w, as representing an aspirate, has but an evanescent sound; so that huys bij wreke'r, sounds housebreaker. Breaker, in a literal sense, can have no share in the source of the term, for let the thief get how he will into the house, so that he does but rob it, he is as the housebreaker; but not so the man who, having lost the key of his house door, breaks it open to get into his own house again. A BURGLAR, used in a like sense with a housebreaker, is, I have no doubt, as er bergh leere; q. e. in that case there is an emptying of the store room [the dépôt of the stores]; in that instance there is a stripping [plundering of the provision-store [the store-room]]; and thus, a pillaging of the domestic valuables, in former days as precious as the plate and jewels of the present, though of a very different consistence; and a store had then nearly the same meaning as that in which the term is now used in America. Berg, a store, magazine, stock of provision, store-room, pantry, larder, hay-loft, granary, and sounds as we utter burg. Leeren, to empty, to evacuate, to render void, to clear out. JOHNSON derives the term from burg, a house, and larron, in French, a thief; but larron is simply another form of the Italian ladrone, the Latin latro, where it means indefinitely robber, highwayman, and also soldier, life-guardsman, pandour, and occasionally hunter or sportsman, as we are informed in Ainsworth's dictionary. So that burg must be pressed into the meaning of dwelling-house, and the terminal ron conjured away. But are ancient and popular terms in any language ever made up by such means? The term has no other relation to a night-robber, as usually supposed, than that night is the best cover for his purpose; ut jugulent homines, surgunt de nocte latrones.

* Continually.

† Time, duration, and in relation to him, his duration in life, and thus life time.

‡ Was called, as the Dutch heeten, geheeten.

A BEGGAR.

A desirer of favour in any class of society; but by use, confined to one of the poor [destitute]: formerly spelt beger. Er biege'r; q. e. there a-bowing there; there stands he who bows there; implying, who desires your notice [favour], that you should observe his distressed appearance, either in relation to countenance or apparel; and may extend in sense to kneeling, as bending or bowing. We say, he bowed him out of the room, in the sense of he begged him [desired, asked him] to leave [quit] the room. To beg the question, is to desire [to crave] the point in dispute may be taken as granted for the purpose in question, but as desire not expressed, but only collected from the manner, tone, or turn of what is said at the time. The above original phrase, which sounds begar, has been travestied into the new substantive form of beggar. Of this stock is the Dutch biechten, to confess, where profound bending is the formula of submission and humiliation, and the posture assumed in that practice by the penitent. Bieghen, biegen, to bend, to bow, in other forms of dialect buigen, boogen, buegen, bogen, whence our to bow.

“Pore in possession in purse and in cofer bothe,
And as a lyon on te loke, and lordly of speach, Boldest of BEGERS, a boster that nought hath.”

VIS. PIER. PLOWM.

The word has been generally derived from the Dutch begeeren, to aspire to, to have a passion for or hankering after, to require urgently, to desire ardently, and is the root of begerte, lust, greediness, cupidity, appetency; and thus implies a far higher ground of demand than the humble submissive confined and bashful hint of the mendicant, in order to obtain his pittance. Beggar, when used in relation to the higher ranks of life, is in a secondary and derogatory sense. A beggarly action is not an action betokening ardour of desire, appetency, but a mean, submissive, derogatory action. He begged his life, is not he desired his life to be saved, for who can suppose he does not? but implies he behaved himself in a mean, submissive, cringing manner to him in whose power it was to save him.

TO BROACH.

To broach a subject, to broach a barrel of beer or a bottle of wine, is to break into, to begin upon, to open the object in question. The term is also used in the sense of to spit, to pierce. Braecken; q. e. to break into, to break up for the first time; and, in another direction of sense, to bring up, to vomit, to belch, to bring up wind. Braeken de acker, is to break up, dig up, plough up the land [field]. And to broach a subject of conversation, or a barrel of liquor, is to begin to make use of it, to enter upon it, and also to bring the contents up or out. To spit a fowl, is to break into it, and so enter it. The French broche, a spit, and our own term broach, formerly used in the same sense, are as braecke, the contracted braecking, as the old participle present of the above braecken, and thus as the breaking into, or that which breaks into. The French ch, as well as our own ch, were once pronounced as k now is.

“ Whose offered entrails shall their crime reproach,
And drip their fatness from the hazle BROACH.”—DRYDEN.

“ He felled men as one would mow hay, and sometimes BROACHED a great number of them upon his pike, as one would carry little birds spitted upon a stick.” HAKEWELL.

“ I will notably provide that you shall want neither weapons, victuals, nor aid; I will open the old armouries, I will BROACH my store, and bring forth my stores.” KNOWLES.

“ And now the field of death, the lists,
Were entered by antagonists,
And blood was ready to be BROACHED *,
When Hudibras in haste approached.” HUDIBRAS.

* Begun upon, entered into, not as JOHNSON supposes, let out.

"The error that Pison was Gange, was first BROACHED * by JOSEPHUS."—RALEIGH.

"Those who were the chief instruments of raising the noise, made use of those very opinions themselves had BROACHED † for arguments to prove that the change of ministers was dangerous,"—SWIFT.

OBS. JOHNSON puts the cart before the horse, and derives all the above terms from the French broche, for which he gives no etymology.

BOB CHERRY.

As the well-known children's play. Bij ho'p scheere je; q. e. by being placed high up there is always [some] play [sport]; by the height it is placed in above, the game is made [or the players made game.] And though a cherry is that which is now usually suspended at the level of the mouth by a thread for the game, yet the custom of using that fruit has arisen solely from that part of the original expression which has resounded in its travesty into cherry, for that fruit had otherwise no share whatever in the true meaning or source of the term for the play. Bij ho'p, bij ho op, by high up, by being at the required height, sounds bob, the p and b interchanging in sound. Ho, hoghe, hooghe, high. Scheere, as the participle present of scheeren, to make sport of, to make game of, to play with, and the same word with schertsen. Je, ever, and also somewhat. To cherry-bob, to deceive, to impose upon, and so to mock, make game of, is a verb formed from the travesty, and from the nature of the play, which ensures a proportion of abortive attempts and failures to those who play at it, while attempting to snap the cherry which dangles before them, their hands being placed behind them. As regards the term bob having, as explained, acquired by its original form the sense of high up [at the top], it has been applied in the phrase bobtailed, in relation to a dog, and subsequently to a wig in that import; a bobtailed dog is one whose tail is only high up, the lower length having been taken off, and thus a short tailed dog; the same in regard to a horse. The slang expression of pretty bobbish, as an answer to how are you? is an equivalent to pretty uppish, pretty high in health or spirits; and we say high spirited, and in high health. To bob, in the sense of to play or move up or down, or against, is evidently grounded in the action imparted to the cherry or in the game of bob-cherry. To bob, as a ludicrous synonym for to thump, knock, or beat, is as the stroke or hitting of that which was suspended for the game, and which, when missed by the mouth, struck the face. The bob of an ear-ring is the jewel or ornament that hangs swinging about from the ring or fastening; the pendant portion. Bob, in tag-rag, and bobtail, has been explained in the first volume of this essay. I have little doubt the Spanish bobo, a fool, boberia, an act of folly, bobear, to make a fool of, and the other relative forms of them belong to this source. Este mundo engana-BOBOS [this fool-deceiving world].

* Brought up.

† Begun upon, entered upon.

BOB-CHERRY teacheth us at once two noble virtues, patience and constancy; the first in adhering to the pursuit of one end; the latter in bearing disappointment."—ARBUTHNOT & POPE.

—————“ Avaunt you curs!
Be thy mouth or black or white,
Or bob-tail like, or trundle tail,
Tom will make him weep and wail.”—SHAKSPEARE.

“ There was a BOB-TAILED cur cried in the Gazette, and one that found him brought him home to his master”—L'ESTRANGE.

—————“ Those bastard Britons, whom our fathers
Have in their own land beaten, bobbed, and thumped,”
SHAKSPEARE.

“ I have BOBBED * his brain more than he has beat my bone.”
SHAKSPEARE.

“ Live Roderigo !
He calls me to a restitution large
Of gold and jewels, that I BOBBED from him
As gifts to Desdemona. IDEM.

“ Here we have been worrying one another, who should have the booty, till this cursed fox has BOBBED us both of it.”
L’ESTRANGE.

“ And sometimes lurk I in a gossip’s bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab ;
And when she drinks, against her lips I bob †,
And on her withered dewlaps pour the ale.”—SHAKSPEARE.

“ You may tell her,
I’m rich in jewels, rings, and BOBBING pearls,
Plucked from the Moor’s ears.” DRYDEN.

“ The gaudy gossip, when she’s set agog,
In jewels drest, and at each end a BOB.” IDEM.

“ To bed, to bed, will be the bob † of the song.”
L’ESTRANGE.

“ I am sharply taunted, yea sometimes with pinches, nips, and BOBS.”—ASCHAM.

“ At every close she made, the attending throng Reply’d, and bore [carried on] the BURTHEN of the song.”
DRYDEN.

The extracts selected by JOHNSON as vouchers for the various applications of this word display the tact and sagacity which belonged to him, but in regard to its etymology his wonted unacquaintance with the source and nature of the language.

* Puzzled, bothered, as is done by the dangling plaything of the game to the mouth of him who plays it, and which, in the original form of the game, was probably a substance less easily caught or snapped, than by the present substitute, the cherry.

† Hit transiently, as the cherry, or what else of the game, does the mouth.

‡ The highest sounding, the most evident part of the song, the chorus, the burthen, which term I take to be a travesty of the French bourdon, the Italian bordone, as the bass, base, or loudest of the wind instruments [and thus the highest sounding]. And the chorus, as the noisiest is also as the most ear-striking portion of a song. And the bob in a bob-major, as a

BROKE IN.

As, that horse is well [or ill] broken in, and as similarly applied to other instances, persons, corps, &c. &c. Broke in; q. e. in a state of due use, in a state such as is required for use, or, such the use [usage] requires; in the fashion or habits proper for service; or, according to the context, in a contrary import. Broke, breuck, bruijck, habit, custom, manners, usage. In, as with us. Vrugtgebruik, is usufruct, the use or service of.

TO TOLL.

As, to toll the bell of a church to announce [to tell] a death or the approach of the funeral or body, to call to prayers, &c. &c. Toe taele de belle; q. e. for language [tongue], the bell; as a mean of annunciation [telling] the bell is used; as a call, the bell; here the bell is as a call. Toe, as, for, by way of. Taele, taal, telling, language, discourse, speech. Belle, bell. So that the amount of the expression is, the bell is made use of in this case for a mean of announcing the death of the person in question, and thus to summon the attention of his fellow-men within the sound, or in the case of a funeral, their attendance, as the outward sign of social sympathy in the event. Taele, taal sounds toll, where the o is long. Toll, in the sense of tax, tribute, passage-money, excise duty, is as taele, betaele, for taeling, betaeling, the participle present of taelen, betaelen, to count out [to tell out] the money, to pay, and thus as the payment made. JOHNSON disposes of this word by imputing its origin to the Latin tollo, and thus as that which is lifted or raised, taken up or away; but the o in tollo is short, general peel of bells, is as the ringing of the whole set in the belfry, and thus the chorus of the whole set, and so the noise of the whole of them.

and the past participle sublatus, so that I cannot see how toll, as raised, is to be come at in that verb; and I suspect it to be a mere dream of his Latin and Greek struck fancy. Besides, the French taille [toll, tax], which is from a same source as toll, shows the vowel a belongs to its original form. HORNE TOOKE, who is as much bewildered in an Anglo-Saxon maze as JOHNSON in his Latin and Greek one, brings the word out of the Anglo-Saxon tilian, to lift up, which is no other than another form of the Dutch tillen in the same sense, whence the Latin tollere; so that JOHNSON and he meet together in the dark. H. TOOKE says, to toll a bell, is to lift it up! Is that what is meant? A toll, he says is as that which is raised, lifted; but is it not that which is first [and must necessarily be] paid, before it can be lifted or taken away by the receiver, a more essential and descriptive act in a toll than the raising it, which cannot take place without its being first paid? Besides, as he admits taille and toll to be a same word does not taele account for the diphthong ai in the French synonym more truly than tilian?

“Empson and Dudley the people esteemed as his horse-leeches, bold men, that took TOLL * of their master’s grist.”

BACON.

“The same Prusias joined with the Rhodians against the Byzantines, and stopped them from levying the toll † upon their trade into the Euxine.”—ARBUTHNOT.

“I will buy me a son-in-law in a fair, and TOLL ‡ for him: for this i’ll none of him.”—SHAKESPEARE.

“Where, when, by whom, and what y’ were sold for,
And in the open market TOLL’D || for.”—HUDIBRAS.

* Took payment, took that which was first paid, not lifted up.
† If toll was here in the sense of levying [of levying], the expression would be tautological and as levying the lifted; but toll is evidently as payment in money [or money’s worth] made.

‡ Pay for him.

|| Paid for.

“Our going to church at the TOLLING * OF A BELL, only tells us the time when we ought to go and worship God.”

STILLINGFLEET.

“The first bringer of unwelcome news,
Hath but a losing office ; and his tongue
Sounds ever after as a sullen bell,
Remember'd TOLLING * a departed friend.”

SHAKSPEARE.

“When any one dies, then by TOLLING * or ringing of a bell the same is known to the searchers.”—GRAUNT.

Oss. I have little doubt the Scotch term toll-booth, as prison, is a travesty of taaleboete; q. e. payment in pittance, making satisfaction for the offence committed, paying the mulct [penalty] of the wrong done. Taele, taale, paying. Boete, fine, penance, repentance, satisfaction, amende. We say, he paid for his mistake, in the sense of, he suffered for his mistake.

“ Bold Prometheus, whose untamed desire
Rival'd the sun with his own heavenly fire,
Now doom'd the Scythian vulture's endless prey Severely PAYS for animating clay.”—ROSCOMMON.

TO TILL.

As used in regard to the soil; to cultivate, to labour the ground with the view to production. Telen, teelen, teulen, tuijlen, toelen, to cultivate [to labour, to work] the ground [soil, earth], in one direction of its sense; and, in another to engender, to procreate, to beget, to produce, to bring forth; and, through some of its different forms of spelling, the source of our to toil; and also of the term tool, as the instrument by which labour is done. But toils in the sense of snare, trap, means of enclosing, is simply as the French toiles, as the canvass [cloth, network] employed on the continent for the forming a kind of enclosure or pound into which the game is driven to be taken or slaughtered by the sportsman Il a tué un sangulier dans les TOILES ; tendre les TOILES ; quand on vent predre les cerfs en vie, on les prend dans LES TOILES, are all sound French expressions. JOHNSON is right in regard to this last expression and nearly so in respect to that of to till but HORNE TOOKE, in the face of such an evidently true source for the two terms, has whimsically fixed upon the Anglo-Saxon tilian [the Dutch tillen] as the source of both, and says, to till is to lift up ! Our tilth, is the same word with the Dutch teelt produce, and thus as that produced by tilling [tillage]. The French toile, as cloth, and the Latin and Italian tela, cloth, web, belong here, and are a the produce of labour, and probably also tellus as the producer, means of production or else, as that which is cultivated or used for agriculture, in the same way that our word earth is as eerd, ploughed [till'd from eeren, to plough. And telum, as weapon tool for war or hunting, has I suspect no other source ; hence also its import in sensu obsceno, a id quo generatur.—Exorsa haec TELA est non mal omnino mihi, is a sentence where TELA has evidently the sense of work, business, something to do [to employ, to occupy].

* The calling, announcing, telling of.

A KING-FISHER.

As the bird so called. Er ging vite schier ; q. e. there went a complete streak ; there passed that which had the appearance of a mere streak or ray of light ; implying by its swift passage and shine of feather, it could scarcely be distinguished for any thing but a mere streak [or ray] of light that shot by. And what more descriptive and characteristick of the sudden dart of that bird, when suddenly roused it takes its flight from you ? With king the term can have no connection, nor with fisher, more than with any other bird which haunts the water-edge for fry. In French the bird is called alcyon, and in som places, popularly, martin-pecheur. Ging, went, passed on, as the participle of gaen, to go Vite, a streak, a ray, a line, a trace. The French vite, and the Dutch vits, rapid, quick, seem to be connected here. Schier, entirely, quite, with which our sheer is the same word. G and k intermutate, sterlinck and starling, swinck and swing are same words in both examples.

A HOBBY-HORSE.

A favourite pursuit, but always implying either excess in the ardour with which it is followed, or folly in the person from its insignificance, in the eyes of every body except himself, and thus a kind of mania or irregular ardour. Er hope bij hoore's; q.e. here expectation is a requisite condition; this is a case where hope is the sine quid non; implying without an assurance from itself in regard to ultimate success, no one could persevere in the unusual manner seen in this case, and thus, inferring an exhibition of such an extraordinary degree of hope as can only belong to one who believes he can command the required result in spite of all opposing circumstances, and that consequently he is either a fool or madman in this regard. Hope, hoop, the same word as with us and grounded in op, up, upwards, above, on high: and hope, is as expectation from on high, the looking up for the desired event to Heaven, the confidence in power belonging to nowhere here below; so that hope is as expectation from [confidence in] that which we know to be beyond ourselves [above us], and for the attainment of which our confidence must be directed to a power above [beyond] any we know of on earth, or else what is hope? Hope may not be entertained; but if entertained, how else is it to present itself to us? The Latin optare, to wish for, to choose [to take that which is wished above the rest] is formed from opt, geopt, the past præterite of oppem, to raise, to lift up, and thus as that which is raised in the mind [a wish], or as that which is taken up [a choice]. Hence probably also optimus (the best) the contraction of optatissimus, as the most choice or the most to be wished for. The German hoffnung, hope, is evidently connected with the Dutch heffen, to lift up, to raise up, whence our to heave, and thus grounded in an analogus direction with our hope. Hoore, as the contraction of hooring, the participle present of hooren, behooren, to belong to. Bij, at hand, present. S, is is. Hope, implies no pleasure except negatively and taking for granted no one turns to Heaven [a protection beyond him] for evil nor does he select it or wish it. Futurity is necessarily implied in the term, for that which is in hope cannot have happened and must be yet to come.

“Sweet HOPE! kind cheat! fair fallacy! by thee
We are not where or what we be;
But what or where we would be: thus art thou
Our absent presence, and our future now.”—CRASHAW.

OBS. The different degree, in a same scale, of to wish and to hope is well exemplified by MILTON in the following lines.

“He sought them both, but wished his hap might find
Eve separate: he WISHED, but not with HOPE
Of what so seldom chanced: when to his WISH Beyond his HOPE, Eve separate he spies.”—MILTON.

But a HOBBY-HORSE, as the stick over which the child strides, and jumps or hops in imitation of a horse, I take to be as; er hobbe je o'er's; q. e. in this instance there is a perpetual jumping [hopping] up and down astride [a top, over]; and the term refers to the straddling hop or jump of the child in question, but does not import over what that may be, a stick, wooden plaything, or what else. Hobbe as the participle present of hobben, hoppen, to jump up and down, to move about irregularly. Er hobbe je oer's, by adding an aspirate to o'er's, sounds a hobby-horse. O'er, over, above, on top. S, is, is.

“ As young children, who are tried
In go-carts, to keep their steps from sliding,
When members knit, and legs grow stronger,
Make use of such machine no longer ;
But leap pro libitu, and scout
On ~~mons~~ called hobby or without.”—PRIOR.

THE DOG SHALL BE DROWNED.

A popular phrase implying what you have said shall go no further [shall be kept secret]; but, though a well known and established expression in that sense, one not of so frequent occurrence as some others of its category. De dooghe! schal bedroewend; q. e. Patience! Distressful voice! Forbearance! Cease that disturbing tone! Implying, you need not express so much alarm and anxiety, I have no intention of telling what you have said to me. A prosopopoeia, as spoken by the person to whom the secret has been mentioned on observing the anxious and distrustful manner or voice of the one who has told it to him, while enjoining secrecy or caution to him. De, the. Dooghe, ghedooghe, patience, forbearance, permission, pardon. Schal, geschal, loud noise, high sound. Bedroewend, distressing, soul-harrowing, grief-exciting. Bedroewend, sounds, be drowned.

SALMAGUNDI.

As the term for a dish composed of a medley of eatables and sauces [a compound],—in French salmagundis. So al meē gund die; q. e. all mixed together in this way, is what suits the taste; this is a sort of medley that is liked; such a mixture as this is agreeable to the palate [appetite]. The term was once spelt also salmagundin, both by us and by the French in the time of Rabelais. So al meē, thus all together. Meé, mede, together. Gunnen, gonnen, to be acceptable to, to please, to suit the wishes. Die, dies, dien, this, what is here before us. JOHNSON thinks the term a travesty of selon mon gout [according to my taste], while GATTEL attributes it to a corruption of the words salgama condita [salted vegetables]. But by what process is salmagundi to be got out of either of these phrases?

CHICANE.

Fraudulent evasiveness; trickery; a resorting to falsehood for a blind to truth; trifling with facts for a bad purpose. Schie ka inne; q. e. the jack-daw quickly presents itself; the sly mischievous chattering personage soon makes his appearance; the crafty, thieving, tricking, chatter-box is never out of sight in the business in question. Ka, kae, kauw, kouw, jack-daw, and here the trope of a sly chattering mischievous person; and no one who has entertained this bird as a favourite at large but will be aware of its fitness for characterizing the mischief-doer, chatterer, hider, and purloiner of all within its reach and power. We say (in a somewhat analogous direction of sense) of a tricky slippery talker [reasoner], one never knows where to find him, meaning, he shifts the points of his discourse so flightily and perpetually, one does not know how to argue with him. The French say il y a une rhumatisme qui me chicane; that is, I have a flying sort of rheumatism, one that flies from one part of my body to the other, so that I never know where it may fix at last. Chicaner le vent is to keep close to the wind, to shift as that shifts, and as it were, to outreach [out-maneuvre] the changing wind itself. The word seems to have come to us through the French. To chicane and chicanery are formations from chicane. The word has been derived from various sources; by some from the Spanish chicho, little; by others from δικανικος, juris peritus; by others, again, from σικανος, sicanus, a Sicilian, as one belonging to a nation formerly of evil report in regard to straightforwardness; but with any of these words I do not see how chicane in any of its imports can have the slightest connection. Inne as the third person of the potential mood of innen in the sense of, to introduce, to put in; also to take in, to swallow, to imbibe. En oversulex den selven supplianten te laten INNEN; and besides [by this mean] to let the aforesaid suitors come in [enter]. Datse u milden zegen door ijver blindt niet INNEN; so that they, blinded by zeal, did not swallow [take in] the bounteous blessings you designed for them.

TO MINCE.

To part [cut] into less pieces, to make less of the subject in question, to take from it's effect. Minken; q. e. to maim, to cut off, to mutilate, to diminish, to lessen. The verb is also spelt mancken and mencken. The Latin mancus, the Italian mancare [to want, to be missing] and the Dutch mangel [want, deficiency], as well as the French manquer, seem of this stock. JOHNSON derives to mince from to minish as to diminish; but minced meat is not diminished meat, but the same quantity of meat made into less pieces; to mince the matter, is not to take from the matter [point in question], but to let it out by halves [by pieces, by bits] in putting it [in stating it]; not to mince the matter, is to speak it entirely and wholly.

“With a good chopping knife MINCE the the two capons as small as ordinary MINCED meat.”—BACON.

“I know no way to MINCE in love, but directly to say I love you.”—SHAKSPEARE, HENRY V.

—————“Iago,
Thy honesty and love doth MINCE the matter,
Making it light to Cassio.”—IBID, OTHELLO.

OBS. Mancken, mencken, mincken, resolve into the present to mince, by a like change of dialect as wancken [to totter, not to stand firm, to reel on one side, to give way, also to hesitate] does into our to wince.

A HOYDEN [HOIDEN.]

A female of rough unpolished manners; a rude girl; a romp. Er heydinne; q. e. in her you have a female savage, a wild female, an unclaimed female, one rough from the hands of nature. The word is as the feminine of heyden, a wild man, a savage, a man out of the wilds of nature, an inhabitant of the uncultivated parts of the world. Heyden, heiden, has two plural forms carrying a difference of import in use, heidens being employed to express the tribe we call gypsies, and heidenen, heathens, as those who from want of instruction are unacquainted with the God of the Scriptures. The word is grounded in hei, heide [whence our heath] as an uncultivated wild. Of the source of hei, elsewhere. A man of heathenish manners, is a man of savage manners. Heathen is spelt by CHAUCER hethin, and hethness is used by him in the sense of that portion of the globe in which the light of the Christian Religion has not been introduced.

"And thereto had he ridden nane more ferre,
As well in Christendom as in HETHNESS."—CHAUCER.

"If the opinions of others, whom we think well of, be a ground of assent, men have reason to be HEATHENS in Japan, Mahometans in Turkey, Papists in Spain, and Protestants in England."—LOCKE.

TOMBOY, TOMCAT, TOMFOOL.

The word tom in the above phrases is evidently a travesty of dom, domme, stupid, dull, heavy, doltish. A tomboy, is a male between boyhood and manhood, and with the manners of one embarrassed by the conflicting feelings belonging to both stages of life, and which cause in him a conduct that has an awkward and senseless appearance to others. A tomcat, is a cat with the heavy lifeless unsportive habits of the male of that species, and which contrast so strikingly with the playful, lively, sportive, ceaseless activity of the kitten and cat of the other sex of it. A tomfool, is a dull fool as contrasted with the noisy, busy, talkative portion of this class. Tomboy, when applied to the female, is as a masculine boyish-mannered girl. When the phrase is applied to the male, it is usually accompanied by the adjective great, as when we say, what a great tomboy that is, and thus indicates the stage of life to be as between man and boy; we cannot say, what a little tomboy that is. JOHNSON says, tomboy, is as tom and boy, tom as the diminutive of Thomas!! And defines the phrase to import a mean fellow!!

TO FRET.

To vex, to consume, to eat away, to corrode, to act upon by eating away [by preying upon]; and in a secondary sense, to irritate, to agitate, as from the effect consequent to continued gnawing [eating]. Vereten; q. e. to consume by eating, to eat away, to gnaw out, to consume. Hence the Anglo-Saxon fretan, to devour, and the German fressen in the same sense. And fretwork, as a chamber ornament in relief, is as that which is produced by the removal [cutting away] by tools, or else by a suitable corrodng means, the level portion, so as to produce the protuberances which form the ornaments or figures in relief. And when formed by casting in a mould, the mould has been operated upon as explained, so that the source of the term by which that work is then known is in fact the same. Has the French frotter, to rub away, to wear away [to remove] by rubbing, to consume by friction, as when two pieces of stone are rubbed against each other, any other source?

“ Then saw I brent the ships hoppsteris, *
 The hunter strangled with the wild boris,
 The sowe FRETTING † the chyld righte in the cradel,
 The coke scalded for all his long ladel.” CHAUC

“ And from a ferre came walking in the mede
 The God of love, and in his hand a quene,
 And she was clade in roiall habite grene ;
 A FRET ‡ of golde she had next her here ||,
 With flourounes small.” I_E

—“Drop them still upon one place,
 Till they are FRETTED § us a pair of graves
 Within the earth.” SHAKSPEA

“You may as well forbid the mountain pines
 To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,
 When they are FRETTED ¶ by the gusts of Heaven.” I_E

Obs. Liquor upon the FRET, is liquor in a state of agitation, commotion. The fret of a lute, is that which regulates the agitation [vibration] which causes the sound in stringed instruments. JOHNSE misled by the term fret when used in the sense of frith, [a narrow channel or strait of the sea,] a evidently the same word with the Latin fretu attributes the whole stock of words of a like form of spelling to that Latin term ; which, in view, clearly belongs to fret, as verete, the contract participle present of the above vereten, and thus a wearing away by the current of the passing water in the same way that all channels of rivers are made. The current in course of time wears away a passa for itself. Add the Latin terminal um, the trave of the Greek ον, and fret becomes fretum.

“ Euripus generally signifieth any strait, FRET, or channel of the sea, running between two shores.”—BROWN.

“ Take a piece of glover’s leather that is very thin, and your gold therein, with sal armoniack, binding it close ; then hang it up ; the sal armoniack will FRET away, and the gold remain behind.”—PEACHAM on Drawing.

* Steersman. † Devouring.

‡ An ornament of gold with figures in relief.

|| Hair. § Worn away, worn out.

¶ Agitated, acted upon, brushed by, rubbed against.

A HARD HEART.

Unrelenting malice, obdurate vindictiveness, immoveable grudge [animosity]. Er harrd haet; q. e. there [in the person in question] malice abides; in him malice is permanent, with him malignity has taken up its quarters [has a fixed residence, a constant abode, refuge]. Through the travesty which brings in, by analogy of sound, the word heart, the sense of want of feeling has been conveyed into the present form in the place of malignity, which belongs to the original phrase. Haet, haut, sounds as we utter heart. Harren, to abide, to continue fixed, to last on, to endure. Our to harden in the sense of to make hard, is the Dutch herden in the same meaning, and formed from herd, hard, in the same import as with us, but grounded in haeren, heren, to burn up, either by heat or cold, to scorch, to dry up, and thus imports the effect produced on substances by frost or sun, either in regard to solidity or else in regard to durability. The Latin ardere, ardor, arduus, &c. &c., belong here. So do our heart and hearth, as will be elsewhere explained. And, in another direction of the sense, also the Latin hærere, to remain fast, to abide by, to stick to, and which is in fact the same verb with the above explained harren. We had once the verb to hard in use with us, as formed from hard. We say, he stuck to his purpose, in the sense of he kept fixed to his intention [way of thinking]; the Latin says, hæsit in eddem sententiæ, remained fixedly in the same mind [opinion, way of thinking]. The Latin durare has both the import of to harden, and of to endure [last]; and so has harden, herden, in Dutch. And, I suspect, durare is grounded in, or connected with urere, to burn [whence adurere in a same sense] in the like way that harden is with haeren, heren, to burn up. Urunt montana nives, is as sound an expression as urit ignis; and so is Boreæ penetrabile frigus.

adurat. Frost hardens water, fire clay. We can say, the grass has been burnt up, either in relation to sun or frost. And to trace the above aspirated Dutch and unaspirated Latin terms to a same primordial source might be a round-a-bout, but not a difficult task. The a passes easily into the u, hang and hung are the different tenses of a same verb.

"He HARDETH * when he nought missaith."—CHAUCER.

JACK'S AS GOOD AS HIS MASTER.

Importing, if the one in question is a bad master, he will find a bad servant in the other in question: if the one is no master the other will be no servant. J'hach's als gehoud als hij's mast er; q. e. the hire-ling [the dependent upon chance] is attached [devoted] in proportion as he is well or ill fed; the hired person becomes bound to the hirer in the ratio of the treatment he meets with¹; if well entertained he works well, if ill entertained he works ill. J'hach, je hach, ever chance, for ever a dependant upon chance occasions. Gehoud, faithful, beholding, obliged, and sounds as we pronounce good. Als, as: hij's, hij is, he is. Mast, gemast, the participle past of masten, mesten, to fatten, to feed well, to cram. Our term the mast, as the nut or fruit of the oak, beech, chesnut, &c. &c., is, I suspect, de maste, as the participle present of the above masten, and thus as the feeding [food] produced by those trees, and evidently grounded in aes, food. The beasts of the forest are well known to feed and fatten from it in the autumn. The moral of the expression, at the head of this article, amounts to this; the master and man having (in the sense above explained) a mutual hold [tie] upon each other they are so far upon an equal footing.

* He confirms [hardens, emboldens] when he don't contradict [hinder].

"The oaks bear MAST, the briars scarlet hips,
The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush
Lays her full mess before you."—SHAKSPEARE.

LITTLE PITCHERS HAVE LONG EARS.

An expression, from the form it now bears, used as a sort of metaphorical hint or caution to people in their conversation, if children are present, to be upon their guard in what they say; for children having both ears and tongues are not to be treated as ciphers, seeing they may either retain what is improper and hurtful to themselves, or repeat what was improper to have been told before them, and by so doing cause mischief to others in the betraying of secrets they ought not to have heard. Littel pit schier's; have, loen! gier's; q. e. essence is small in quantity but it is all ready [fit for use, wants no preparation]; wide spread wealth, foolish man! is a vulture [that which gnaws, preys upon you]; the quintessence, however small in appearance, is all useful at once; but extensive possessions, short-sighted man! are a plague which destroys your peace of mind [preys upon your vitals]. The little which supplies what is necessary without further trouble or preparation, is, to all, but a fool, a more desirable acquisition than the much which brings with it care and pain. The words, which have fallen into the form of the travesty, though they preserve the precise sound of the original, have carried the import into a sense somewhat wider from that of the original form than is usual in other analogous instances. In itself, the travesty is a literal absurdity, but has been through time and custom, applied as above stated; an application by which but a slight glimpse of any analogy of import between the two forms of expression can be perceived. HORACE, in reference to a somewhat similar view as that comprised in the original form in relation to riches, applies the epithet operosæ to divitiae, and

OVID, in its proper gender, the same to œs, money. Another philosopher extends the prospect so far as to suggest uter divitior, cui deest, an cui superat? whether the happiest is he who has not all he wants, or he who has beyond what he wants? and magnus inter opes inops, has a tincture of the same school. Littel, whence our little, as small. Pit, pitte, [with which our pith is a same word], metaphorically, essence, prime, best, force, strength, quintessence; the pith of an argument, is the essence [strength, strongest part] of an argument. Schier, soon there, at hand, presto. Have, possession in an indefinite sense, extensive means, boundless wealth, divitiae, opes, facultates. Loen, dull of apprehension, stupid, shortsighted, slow of comprehension, whence our loon, as a stupid clumsy awkward clodhopper [countryman].

“Thou cream-fac’d LOON !
Where got’st thou that goose look ?”—SHAKSPEARE.

Gier, vulture, metaphorically, a concealed constantly devouring anxiety of mind [a gnawing, indefinite torment]. S, is, is.

“Whan it remembrieth me
Upon my youth, and on my jollite,
It tiklieth me about the herte rote,
Unto this day it doth my herte bote*,
That I have had my world as in my time ;
But age alas ! that all woll undermine,
Hath me bereft my bewte and my PITH ;
Let go, farewell, the Devil go therewith.
The flour is gon, there n’is no more to tell,
The bran, as I best can, now mote I sell.”—CHAUCER.

HEART-BURN.

As when we say, I have got the heart-burn, and mean the well known sensation of heat in the stomach proceeding from acidity caused by indigestion. Aat-berne; q. e. food-burning; the sensation of burning [heat] caused by food taken into the stomach; a feel resembling that of heat in the stomach, proceeding from something which has been taken into it, and which does not amalgamate with the digestive menstruum of that viscus. Aet, aat, eatables, food, that which is eaten; aspirate aat, where the double a has a very broad and lengthened sound, and you have our utterance of heart. Bernen, barnen, branden, to burn, whence also our old to bren and to brennin, so frequently occurring in CHAUCER, in the import of to burn. But heart-burning, in the import of inward discontent, envy, malignant feeling, is as haet berning [barning]; q. e. burning hate, flagrant hatred. Haet, hate, hatred, and sounds heart. Berning is the antiquated form of the participle present of the above explained bernen, barnen, to burn.—In the first instance acidity in the stomach can plainly have nothing to do with over-heat in the heart; nor in the second can discontent arise from the same cause in the same organ. So that both are travesties of originals bearing the true meaning in which we now use the phrases

* Enjoyment, profit, pleasure, as the Dutch bute, baete; whence our boot in the phrase to boot.

“ How tartly that gentleman looks! I never can see him but I am HEART-BURNED * an hour afterwards.”

SHAKSPEARE.

“ In great changes, when the right of inheritance is broke there will remain much HEART-BURNING † and discontent among the meaner people.”—SWIFT TO POPE.

* Here by way of pun or play upon the word tartly, in the sense of sourly [acidly]; as thus importing he looks so sourly that he gives me the heart-burn for an hour after I have seen him. JOHNSON has evidently misconceived the phrase in this place, when he explained it, as, having the heart inflamed.

† Jealousy, suspicion; as the passion lighted up in the heart by what has been done.

‘Upon the tresses of Richesse
 Was set a circle of noblesse,
 Of BRENDE * golde, that full light yshone,
 So faire trou I was nevir none,
 But he were knowing † for the nones ‡,
 That could devisin all the stones
 That in that circle shewin clere.”—Chaucer.

A HOT-HEADED MAN.

One who acts and speaks as if his brain was turned [deranged] by passion; one whose conduct bespeaks a change from a rational to an irrational state of mind. Er hotte heet'et m'aen; what is said there, comes from a state turned into one of disorder [confusion]; what he says evinces a state changed from its proper nature, from a natural [sound] state of mind, to an undue, or deranged one.

Hotte, as the participle present of hotten, to curd, to curdle, to change from the usual and regular form or shape to another which is not the natural [sound] or original one. Milk is no longer milk when turned, but serum [whey] and curd, and the head when turned by fury from its usual sound [natural] state is no longer the head in its true [regular] state. Heet'et, heet het (spoke it) sounds headed. We say, the blood curdled in the veins, in the import of became disturbed [disordered] by some shocking sight or event.

“His chang'd powers at first themselves not felt Till CURDLED cold his courage gan t' assail.”—SPENSER.

“One would not make the same person zealous for a standing army and publick liberty; nor a NOTHEADED, crackbrained, excomb forward for a scheme of moderation.”—ARBUTHNOT.

“And hope is lasse and lasse alway Pandare!
 Encresin eke the causis of my care
 So welawiae, why n'll my herte brest §?
 For why? in love there is but little rest.

* Burning, burnished. † Knowing, cunning.

‡ Nonce, purpose, design. § A metathesis of berst, burst.

Pandare answerid, friend, thou maiest for me,
 Doen as The list, but had I it so HOTE *
 And thine estate she should ygo with me,
 Though al this toun cried on this thing by note,
 I n'olde set al that noise at a grote,
 For when men have cried, than woll they roun†,
 Eke wondir last but nine dayes nere in toun.”

CHAUCER.

I suspect our term hot, is never the true preterite of to heat, which is heated, but ever as the above explained word. A hot poker, is a poker changed from its usual state by the effect of fire, and so far implies heat, as fire is the mean of the change; but we also say, a hot firing of small arms, where heat can have nothing to do, for we only mean a quick irregular state of firing [or shooting] with small arms. A hot chase, is a disorderly [irregular] chace, but has no relation to heat. A hot scent, is one which sets the hounds into a state of irregular headlong pursuit, a pursuit where the course is altered to one of greater but irregular rapidity; and what can heat have to do there? To trace the source of hot in this view of its import would be too round-about and tedious for this article. Of the word heat, it will be spoken in some other page. HORNE TOOKE says hot is the past participle of to heat, but that is heated, and not hot.

HOITY TOITY.

A homely exclamation [expression] on witnessing some scene of noisy mirth, some boisterous game of romps. Hooitij stoeijetij; q. e. hay time, toying time; haymaking time, the time for romping, [pastime]. Hooi, hoy, heuy, hey, hay. Tij, tye,

* Bungled it, confused it, got into this state of disorder, into this scrape, not as MR. URRY supposes ordered it, as grounded in heeten, to command.

† To speak softly, to whisper.

tijde, season time. Stoeijen, to romp, to toy, to play wantonly together as was done among the haymakers, at that period, in the hay fields.

A JOLTHEAD.

A fool, a dunce, a dolt, a block-head. Er jool t'heete; q. e. there is he who can be called no other than fool, there is he who every body must name fool, one who has fool written in his very countenance. Jool, fool, simpleton. T, te, to. Heete as the participle present of heeten, to name, to call, and te heete is to the very calling, so that he can be called nothing else. JOHNSON gives also the sense of a great head, to this term, but no etymology for it. I suspect it never had this meaning but by error; we say, a great jolthead, in the import of a great fool, and perhaps the idea of a great head has arisen from this epithet, which if the term really meant a great head would be tautology.

"Fie on thee, JOLTHEAD, thou can'st not read!"

SHAKSPHEARE.

" And stode right at her bedd'is fete,
And call'd her right as she HETE."*—CHAUCER.

A TOM TIT.

The little bird known by that term as well as by that of titmouse. Er dom tijt; q. e. there is the silent tit [little bird]; the little bird that neither sings nor makes any noise; the little bird which nobody hears. Titmouse is as tijt mosch; q. e. the little bird of the sparrow kind; a little species of sparrow. Tijt, is as the smallest of the bird kind and as the antiquated tiet, the smallest of the pecking tribe, grounded in titten, tieten, to push against, to peck; whence our term tittle, a point, a particle, the least possible; perhaps also the French

* Was named, by name, as she was called, latterly spelt hight in the same sense.

petit. Een vuile of boze tiet; is a popular expression for a nasty spiteful female that pecks at [flies at] every body. Dom, dumb, silent, also stupid, dull, foolish. Mosch, musch, a sparrow, founded in the antiquated mose, œstrum, salacitas.

“The nightingale is sovereign of the song,
Before him sits the TITMOUSE silent by,
And I unfit to thrust in skilfull throng,
Should Colin make judge of my foolerie.”—SPENSER.

“The TITMOUSE and the peckers hungry brood
And Progne with her bosom stain’d in blood.”

DRYDEN.

TO RIDE THE GREAT HORSE.

To speak pompously, to assume a commanding tone in conversation, to play the part of a self-important personage. Te raede de gereed hoore's; q. e. to your decree the ear is ready; to the resolve you are going to make the attention is upon the harkening; but raede, as a sententiously stated resolve, being a rather formal and over-solemn term, in common discourse gives to the expression a degree of irony [ridicule] which survives in the application of the travesty now in use among us. Raede, raad, opinion, advice, council, resolve, decree, conclusion come to, determination formed in the mind; and sounds as we pronounce ride. Gereed, ready [de gereed geld, is, the ready money] and sounds great. Hoore, oore, oor, ear, hearing. S, is, is. Hoore's sounds horse.

“The laughter arose of gentil foulis al,
And right anone the sede * foulis chosin had,
The Turtel trewe, and gan her to'hem call,
And prayid her to say the sothe † sad,

* Birds that eat seed, as distinguished from those which feed on worms, carrion, fish, &c.

† Sober truth.

Of this matir, and aaked what she rad*,
 And she answered that plainly her entent
 She wolde shewe, and sothly † what she ment.

Nay, God forbid a lovier shulde chaunge
 The Turtel said, and waxte † for shame al rede,
 Though that his lady evirmore be straunge,
 Yet let him serve her ay, tyl he be dede,
 Forsothe I ne praise not the Gos' § is rede,
 For though she dyed, I wolde none other make||,
 I will be her's tyl that the dethe me take."

THE ASSEMBLE OF FOULES.—CHAUCER.

LOVE ME, LOVE MY DOG.

A well known expression, and in the present form implying, with him who uses it, if you wish to shew you like me, you must shew attention to all that is liked by me; you must show you love me and all I love. Love mij, love meē doogh; q. e. value me, value me with honesty [sincerity]; if you esteem me, let it be with good faith; love me well, or love me not at all; if you mean to love me, love me thoroughly [in all regards]. Loven, to value, to set a price upon, to prize. Meē mede with. Doogh, deughd, honesty, probity, sincerity.

CRACK-BRAINED.

Acting capriciously, of irrational conduct, betraying a mixture [spice] of madness [folly] in conduct [conversation, opinion, notions]. Keye recht brel̄t innt; q. e. the fool [madman] holds a large jurisdiction [there, in the character of the person in question]; in him the fool exercises a wide jurisdiction over the domain of his understanding; he is one

* Opined, advised, resolved, determined, opinion [decree] given, as the third person present of to rad [radd] in Dutch raedin, raaden.

† Truly. † Grew, waxed.

§ The goose's speech [say]; rede, speech, oration, reasoning, in Dutch rede.

|| Mate, companion, fellow, assistant, in modern Dutch, makker.

over whom madness has secured a large share. Keye, fool, madman, one of unsteady brain ; half crazed. Bree, breed, breijd, broad, large, extensive. Innen, to introduce, to put in, and also to get in, as revenue [income, profit, gain]. JOHNSON spells the phrase crack-brained, but others in a truer sense cracked (crackt) brained. A crackt brained man, represents, er keye recht bree int m' aen ; q. e. there the madman has a large claim on the person in question along with the rest ! M'aen, meē aen, together with. Keye recht sounds crackt, in spite of the obvious difference in letter, as any one will find upon trial, sounding the e as the Dutch and French now do and as we once did.

“ We have sent you an answer to the ill-grounded sophisms of those CRACK-BRAINED fellows.”—POPE AND ARBUTHNOT.

TO CRAZE [CRAYZE].

To fall off [away], to waste, to decay, to weaken, to diminish, to come to nothing, to render unsound, to damage. Te gerijsen ; q. e. to fall off, to decay, to glide away, to waste away, and thus to injure, to diminish, to bring to decay, to bring into a state of weakness [imbecility]. Rysen, has all the above meanings, and ge is as the impletive prefix, the particle which fulfills [completes] the import, and in the past participle is geresen. Dropping the old infinitive termination en, te gerysen is te gerys, and sounds as we utter to craze. JOHNSON brings the word out of the french écraser, whence our to crash, both of which may probably belong to gerysen, as above explained, in the direction of to break down from a former state ; g, k, and c interchange in sound.

“ What [quoth my lorde] there n' is no more to doen,
Of those perilles I woll beware eftsonse,
I am right sikir, that the potte was CRASED *.”

CHAUCER.

* Unsound, damaged.

“ Relent sweet Hermia, and Lysander yield
 Thy CRAZED * title to my certain right,
 Till length of years
 And sedentary numbness CRAZE † my limbs.”

SHAKSPEARE.

“ Then through the fiery pillar and the cloud,
 God looking forth, will trouble all his host,
 And CRAZE ‡ their chariot wheels.”

MILTON.

“ I lov’d him, friend,
 No father his son dearer, true, to tell thee,
 That grief has CRAZ’d my wits.”

SHAKSPEARE.

Crazedness, crazy, and craziness, are all evident formations from the verb; the last in its frequentative shape, and as gerysigen.

“ The nature, as of men that have sick bodies, so likewise of the people in the CRAZEDNESS § of the minds, possessed with dislike and discontentment of things present, is to imagine that any thing would help them.”—HOOKER.

“ Come my lord
 We will bestow you in some better place,
 Fitter for sickness and for CRAZY || age.”

SHAKSPEARE.

“ The queen of night, whose large command
 Rules all the sea and half the land,
 And over moist and CRAZY ¶ brains,
 In high spring-tide, at midnight reigns.”

HUDIBRAS.

“ Physick can but mend our CRAZY  state, Patch an old building, not a new create.”

DRYDEN.

“ Touching other places, she may be said to hold them as we should do a wolf by the ears; nor will I speak now of the CRAZINESS of her title to many of them.”

HOWEL’S VOCAL FOREST.

WALLS HAVE EARS AND HEDGES HAVE EYES.

In respect to whatever you have to transfer beyond the limits of your own breast you can never

* Weak.

† Enfeeble, weaken, diminish the strength of.

‡ Damage, render useless.

§ Weakness, imbecility.

|| Feeble, diminish in strength.

¶ Injured, unsound.

 Feeble, worn out.

be certain of being safe [you must always incur some risk]. Wie al's, have hier's; aen huidje's have eys; q. e. he that has all within himself need never go from home; external possessions are always a demand upon caution for their safe keeping; he that can confide his happiness to the keeping of the inward man, is independent of trouble from others; outward riches can never be possessed without requisite precaution and consequent care and pain. The amount of the above moral, is a caution to make yourself content with the smallest rate of sufficiency and to act so as to risk no reproof of conscience, and thus to be as independent as possible of others in regard to either what they do, think, or say. Wie, who, he who, the one. Al, all, every thing, the whole. S, is, is. Have, possessions, means, riches. Huid, hoed, heed, caution, keeping, custody.

SING OLD ROSE AND BURN THE BELLOWS.

As the hailing prelude to some scene of profligacy, a sort of defiance to all decency preparatory to the decisive laying it aside for the debauch in question. Singh! hold Droes end behaern de beloves; q. e. Sing! do homage to old Nick and piss upon all the vows you have made in regard to your duty; let there be singing! let the devil be the theme of our glorification, and let us free ourselves from the restraint of all promises of social and religious duty which we have openly or implicitly made. By the term vows, I suspect, this abandoned and now vulgar hallowing in of the debauch, is of monastic origin; the prelude to some friarly carousal. Singh, the imperative of singhen, singen, to sing. Holden, hulden, to inaugurate, to do homage to, to pay obeissance to. Droes, the devil, the duce [deuce]. End, and. Behaernen, to piss upon, to be-piss and thus to show contempt for, in which sense the term is still used by us; behaern, its imperative sounds burn. Beloves as the plural of belove the participle present of beloven, to vow, to promise; the more modern substantive form of which is belofte [vow, promise]; belofte aen God, is a vow to God. Het land van belofte, is, the land of promise.

"Once possess'd of what with care you save

The wanton boys would kiss upon ^{*}your grave."

DRYDEN.

ASK MY ARSE.

A coarse and sulky way of saying I wont answer you, I dont chuse to tell you what you ask me; and implying offence taken either at the manner of the asker of the question, or at the subject of it. Eisch meē eer's; a question should be made respectfully; a demand should be accompanied with good manners; a question is not to be made in an ill-bred manner. More literally, a question implies a respectful [due] manner of asking it. Eer, respect, attention. Eer's, as eer is. Met, mede, along with. The import of the original phrase is, a question not asked in a proper manner [or else concerning an improper subject] is not one that is entitled to an answer. The coarseness of the form is entirely due to the travesty. Eisch and ask are the same word; eisch is an asking, a demand, and sounds ask. Meē eer's, sounds my arse.

BACKGAMMON.

As in the phrases, to play at backgammon; let us have a game at backgammon, &c. By hach gal meē hun; q. e. by the effect of chance they are upon a footing; owing to the dice the one has as good a share in it as the other; the events depending upon chance give the superiority to neither. The Dutch phrase sounds backgamon, as we pro-

* Shew their contempt for you when dead.

ounce that word ; and the means of winning at it depend upon the alternate changes in the castings of the dice, whence in Dutch it is called verkeerspēl; q. e. the game of counterchanging [alternating changes]. By hach, by chance, sounds back. Gat, gad, gade, equal, consorting, alike, of a piece. Meé, mede, with. Hun, them. Meé hun sounds mon. JOHNSON has suffered himself to be hoaxed into the belief, the term was as bach gammon, which somebody had told him was Welsh for a little battle ! MR. THOMSON thinks the last member of the phrase is grounded in the Teutonick gamen, or the Anglo-Saxon gaman, to game, to sport, but groundlessly, for his etymology results into nothing which will not apply to any game or sport played upon a table. In regard to our term game, as sport, play (whence to game, in Anglo Saxon gaman, in Teutonick gamen, in Gothick gamma) I believe it to be a contracted form of gæiijing, gading, the old participle present of gæyen, gaden, to please, to amuse, to recreate, to make gay ; from the root-word gæy, gay, whence our gay, as cheerful, lively, full of spirits ; and thus as an enlivening, a recreating, a filling with spirit, a cheering up, a making cheerful, which is what sport or play does, either as amusement or exercise. The n changes into m, as in endless other instances, and e is the usual and ancient abbreviation of the still older ing as the participle termination. A game at cards, is as amusement [recreation] by the means of cards. Game, as the object of the chace, is that which makes or gives sport, diversion, amusement.

“ Yet it is better for me
 For to be dedde in wifely honeste,
 Than to be a traitor living in my shame.
 Be as he maie, for ernest or for GAME *,
 He shal awake, and rise and go his waie,
 Out at this guttur ere that it be daie.”—CHAUCER.

* Joke, fun.

" But Dame, here as we ridden by the way,
Us nedith not to spekin but of GAME *,
And let autoritys, a Godd 'is name,
To preaching and to schole, eke of Clergy."—CHAUCER.

" But if it like unto this cumpany
I woll yon of a Somner † tell a GAME ‡;
Parde ye may well knowin by the name
That of a Sompnour may no gode be saide." IBID.

—————“ Though I evir plaine,
Or alwaies wepe, I am nothing to blame,
Sens I have lost the cause of all my GAME §.” IBID.

RUNNER.

As in the phrases, a government runner, a Bow-street runner, a treasury runner, &c.; and in the sense of a spy, a collector of information for his employers, a retainer, a messenger, a relater of what he worms out of others for the purposes of his employment. But since the recent introduction of the French system of police, the old metropolitan term bow-street runner has merged in that of policeman; as goaler has also into that of governor, but without the addition of excellency, which the French did not allow even to him of the Cold-bath-fields in Paris. Ruuner; q. e. informer, spy, watcher, whisperer, earwigger. In a more modern form roener, ruener, from runen, roenen (in German raunen), to whisper, to tell to the ear, whence our obsolete to round, antiently to rowne, in the same sense.

“ Verraders, smekers ende aerstekers,
Ruuners || ende plumestrekers ¶.”—MELIS STOKE.

* Of something amusing, sportive, mirth-making.

† An apparitor, a summoner of delinquents before an ecclesiastical court.

‡ A joke, a merry story. § Pleasure, joy.

|| Betrayers, supplicants [courtiers], ear-wiggers, IN-
FORMERS [RUNNERS] and parasites.”

¶ Otherwise pluymstryker.

The Dutch ronde [rond-wachte] and the French ronde as well as the Italian and Spanish ronda [the police-watch, the military or armed watch, the patrole] are all as runde, roende, as the participle present of the above runen, roenen, and thus the informing, the spying of that which is going on in the streets during the night by the corps in question. Our to go the rounds, in the sense of to go to watch or spy, to find out what others are about, as well as to round [to whisper] and round, in round-house, [watch or guard house] evidently belong here. The d, in our more modern to round [as to whisper], seems one of those paragogical uses of that letter, analogous to that of the b in the old spelling of plumb, now plum, and dumb, the same word with the Dutch dom, &c.; for the original form of our to round was to roun, to rowne.

“Being come to the supping place, one of Kalander’s Servants ROUNDED in his ear; at which he retired.”

SIDNEY.

“Sir old Reynarde, is then thine aray.
Why doth my neighbour ’is wife gon so gay ?
She is honourid ovr’ all where she goth;
I sett at home, I have no thrifte cloth.
What dost thou Sirra, at thy neighbour’s house ?
Is she so fair ? art thou so amorous ?
What ROWNST’OW * with our maid ? benedicte !!”

CHAUCER.

“Another ROWNED to his fellow low
And seid he lied.”—IDEM.

“O noble Ovid ! Soth sayst thou God wote,
What slight † is it, if love be long and hote,
That he n’ill find it out in some manere ?
By Pyramus and Thisbe men may lere ‡;
Though they were kept full streight ovr all.
They ben recordid ROUWNING || through a wall;
There n’ is no wight couth find out such a slight.”

IDEM.

* What whisperest thou ?
‡ Learn.

† Trick, artifice.
|| Whispering.

FELLOW.

Spelt by CHAUCER felow, felaw, fela, felau, fele, fel. I suspect, a same word with the Dutch velghe [in German felge] with us felly, felloe, as the circle or round frame of the wheel composed of various members [joints, limbs] acting as one from a common centre, and for a common purpose, and thus a circle of members or felloes mutually equal in importance respecting the purpose they are intended for in common. The term is used sometimes in the plural number, fellies, fellows, and then in a collective sense, as the parts of a whole; in French, les jantes de la roue. But a fellow, as member of a same circle, by the particle a, as one, is as one of the fellies or fellows, and thus a single member of the society or circle in question. A Fellow of the Royal Society, is a member of that circle or society. He has no fellow, in the sense ., he has no equal, is, as he forms no part of any circle, he is a person per se, has no equal in any circle, or at least in the society or circle alluded to. A fellow of a same body or society, and a member of a same body or society, are equipollent expressions. A fellow servant, is a servant of a same family or circle. A fellow creature, is a creature of a same constituency of parts or members, a creature of a same construction of members or parts, and as the phrase is never used but in relation to man, the same as fellow-man. A good or bad fellow, is a good or bad member of a same society or circle. Our expression to circulate a story, is used in a somewhat analogous direction of import, viz: that of to cause or make a story go from or by one member of the circle to another. Fellow can have no derogatory sense but through the context, or else from the manner in which the term is used.

“Cassio has been here set on in the dark,
By Roderigo and FELLOWS that are scap'd.”

SHAKSPERE.

"I have great comfort from this FELLOW: methinks he has no drowning mark about him: his complexion is perfect gallows."—SHAKSPEARE.

"Opinion that did help to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession,
And left me in reputeless banishment,
A FELLOW of no mark or likelihood."—SHAKSPEARE.

The word velge [with us felly, felloe] is as wel-ig, an adjective formation from welen, walen, [in Gothic walwyan] to turn rouud, to wheel, in Latin volvere. The w, v, and f are intermutating aspirates. JOHNSON adopts no etymology for the term. MINSHEW says it is as to follow; JUNIUS that it is as the Anglo Saxon fe, faith, and lag, bound. But though to follow is as volghen, folgen, in the same import, and from a same source in another direction of meaning, yet that fellow can never be brought out of this verb is manifest from its import; and the etymology is a mere guess founded upon a degree of similarity of letter between the two words in defiance of sense.

"I wol the followen * ded, and I wol be,
FELAWE † and cause eke of The, quoth she.
And though than nothing, save the deth only,
Might The departin from me trewily;
Thou shalt no more departin from me,
Than fro the deth, for I wol go with The."

CHAUCER.

HUSBAND.

Huys bouwende; q. e. the founder of the family; the one establishing the family, the one laying the foundation of the family, the one without whom there would be no family [household, people living together in a same house]. A ship's husband, is he who provides the ship with the means of being that for which it is intended, and thus in fact the founder of, or provider for the ship. To husband

* Sometimes spelt follue by the same writer.

† Equal sharer, upon a same footing in regard to fate.

one's time, is to provide time with use, to employ it to make a due use of it. A husbandman is as, e huys bouwende m'uen; q. e. by that he provide his family [the household]; in the import of, b tilling [working] the land he keeps his family. From the ground sense of husband, viz: the provider or founder of a family or household, the term has in a secondary use acquired that of a founder or provider for whatever may be the object in question. The word was spelt formerly husbonde. Huys, with us house, in German haus, is here used in the import of family, either as inhabitants of same house, or descendants of a same founder. Bouwen, to build up, to construct, to lay the foundation or ground, to construct, to create, to make, to make use of, to build upon, also to cultivate [to till] the land; grounded in oue, an antiquated term for earth, ground, soil; and bouwen is as be ou-en, q. e. to put the earth to use, to use it for the purpose of production, to cause it to produce that for which it was intended.

“ Lo here a sharp word for the nonis,
 Beside a well Jesu, both God and man,
 Speke in reprefe of the Samaritan ;
 Thou hast hadde five hussondis, quoth he,
 And that ilke man which that now hath The
 Is not thy husbonde ; thus seid he certeine,
 But what he ment thereby l cannot saine.
 Well ! but I ask a point ; why the fift man
 Was none husbond to the Samaritan ?
 How many might she have in mariage ?
 Yet herd I never tellin in mine age,
 Upon this number true definitioun,
 Men may devine, and glosin up and dounie ;
 But wele I wote express withoutin lye,
 God bad us for to wex and multiplie.”

CHAUCER. Wife of Bath

“ I was considering the shortness of life, and what ill MUSBANDS * we are of so tender a fortune.”

COLLIER ON FAME

* Bad users.

"I hear a great HUSBAND say, that it was a common error to think that chalk helpeth arable grounds."—BACON.

"It will be a pastime passing excellent,
If it be HUSBANDED † with modesty."—SHAKSPEARE.

TO COCK.

As in the expression to cock the eye, and which is, practically, to shut one eye and to look with the other, as we do when we take aim, and as we do when we wish to direct the attention of another to something which is passing in our presence; and, in purport, it is to secure a direct [undivided] view of the point or object in question. Te gaâ oecken; q. e. to encrease the power of the other; to render the other more effective for the purpose intended; as is done when the sight is to be directed to one point. To cock your eye at a person, is as to call his attention to you by shewing yours directed to him. Gaâ, gade, like, equal, a companion, consort, fellow; also weârgaâ. Oecken, to augment, to add to, to encrease, and the root of our to eke, as well as the Latin augere. Omit [as in the more recent form of our dialect we do] the infinitive terminal en, and te gaâ oecken, sounds to cock.—COCK [the male bird], the antient Dutch kocke in the same sense; but kop, having the same import in that language, as well as that of head, top, end, round lump or globular mass at the top, the term cock, as its equivalent in that sense, has been used by us in the phrase hay-cock, a head or round heap of hay. COCK, as the spigot or tap in a barrel, has acquired that name from the handle being formerly made with a figure of the common cock in miniature, or at least with that of its head; and so has what we call the cock of a gun. A weather-cock, is also to be accounted for in the same way. The Dutch use the word haen, haan, cock, in the same sense and for the same reason. Cockt, cocked, in the phrase cocked-hat, is as gehoeckt, cornered. Cockatoo, as the bird so called, is as the creole—or negro French caque-tout, all-cackle, all-prattle; caqueter, is, to chatter, to prattle, and caquetage, prattle, chattering. Cock, as in the phrase cock-boat, the broad and short boat belonging to a man of war, is probably grounded in the Dutch cogge, cog, a small primeval vessel of burthen of a round, deep and broad build; and the ellipsis of kog-schip [a cock-ship, wherry, pinnace] with a hut [shelter] over the hold [stowage]. And, I suspect, cock-pit, in the phrase cockpit of a man of war, is as the covered place parted off in the hold or well of the ship, and thus as kog-pit [ship's well]. Put, pit, a well, a hole in the ground, whence out pit, as well as the French puit, the Latin puteus, and the Italian pozzo. Put is also used as dief-put, the black-hole of a prison, and thus a confined space within the prison, or a place of definite confinement within the prison. We had the term cogge at one time in use with us in the import of a ship's boat.

* Tiller of the ground. † Used.

“ This messangir adoun him gon to hie,
And found Jason and Hercules also
That in a cogge to londe weria igo.”—CHAUCER.

“ What maner of folke, ware and stable, that woll founden hem a pardurable sete, and ne woll not be caste adoun with the loude blaste of the winde Euras, and will dispise the Se, menasyng with floudes. Let 'hem eschue to builden on the KOPPE*, of the mountaigne, or in the moist sandes. For the fell winde Auster tourmenteth the KOPPE † of the mountaignes, with all her strengthes, and the lose sandes refusen to bare the hevy weightes.”—CHAUCER, Boeth.

His berde as anie fox or sowe was redde,
And there to brode as though it were a spade ;
Upon the COPPE † right of his nose he hade
A wert, and thereon stode a tuffte of heeres
Red as the bristells of a sow' is eres.”—CHAUCER.

* Head, summit, crown, top.

† End, top, tip.

A COCKNEY.

As an effeminate, coddled, homebred person, one not used to hard fare and at a loss to shift for himself when out of sight of the smoke of his family's chimney; but oftener used in the more special import of a Londoner, or rather of a London citizen, when in the country or from home, as one that has come from the fountain head of dainty fare and good keep. I suspect the term is an ellipsis of, kokene-jong, or kokene-mol, or kokene-wijf; q. e. a kitchen boy, a kitchen mole, a person who is never out of the kitchen, such a one as we call a dish-clout, one whom the cook threatens with the pinning a dish-clout to his tail, to keep him from perpetually haunting the kitchen, and thus implying a person who is wretched when at a distance from the spot which affords him his principal delight. Kokene, keuckene, a place where the victuals are dressed, a kitchen; whence the Italian cocina, the Spanish cozina, and French cuisine. The word is derived from koeck, a cake, a substance dressed by fire, whence kocken, to cook, and the Latin coquere. The term cockney has given much trouble to our etymologists, some of whom have fetched it out of coquin, and others out of the Italian cuccagna, in French cocagne, but, as it appears to me, wrongly. With coquin it evidently can have nothing to, for a cockney implies nothing in common with a rogue or rascal; nor do I see how it can be got out of cuccagna, as the fabulous or imaginary country of abundance, where every kind of eatable is met with in profusion, and ready dressed, no other trouble being required than to eat away.

"And yet I saye by my soule I have no salt bacon, Ne no COCKNEY, * by Christ, colopes for to make."

VIS. PIERCE PLOWM.

* Here either as a cook and so as the ellipsis of kokene-wijf, or else as a kitchen to dress the required meat.

" So the COCKNEY, * did to the eels, when she put them i' th' pasty alive."—SHAKSPEARE.

" The COCKNEY, † travelling into the country, is surprised at the many common practices of rural affairs."—WATTS.

" I am afraid this great lubber, the world will prove a COCKNEY‡."—SHAKSPEARE.

COCK.

In the phrase cock-sure, quite certain, I take to be the ellipsis of weather-cock, and thus, as much to be depended upon as the pointing of the weather-cock, in regard to the quarter whence the wind then comes or came last. As changeable as the weather-cock, is another direction of sense and refers to the proverbial changeableness of the wind and consequently of that which points out its changes.

" You cataracts and hurricanes spout,
Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the COCKS ||." SHAKSPEARE.

" We steal, as in a castle, COCKSURE."—SHAKSPEARE.

" I thought myself COCKSURE of his horse, which he readily promised me."—POPE.

TO COAX.

To entice, to wheedle. T'u koecks; q. e. here are cakes for you; see the dainties which are ready for you [if you do as I wish]. Koecks the plural of koeck, cake, kitchen stuff, dressed material. T'u, te u, for you. T'u koecks sounds to coax, and, as in numberless other similarly grounded travesties, the sound coming out into the form of a verb, and the original import, by change of dialect, having, in course of time, disappeared, the phrase has been adopted in the modern form of our language

* Here as the cook, kokene-wijf or kokene-jong.

† Here as a Londoner, a shiftless coddled person.

‡ Here also in the foregoing sense. CHAUCER uses the term cockney, but I have lost the extract I had taken.

|| Weather-cocks.

as a verb, and used as such, but generally applied in regard to children or weak minded persons, to drivellers and old men married to young wives.

"The nurse had changed her note, she was muzzling and coaxing the child ; that's a good dear, says she."

L'ESTRANGE.

"I coax ! I wheedle ! I'm above it."—FARQUHAR.

Probably to cocker, in the sense of to pamper, to spoil by indulgence, is simply, toe kock er ; p. e. to the cook there ; come then let us to the cook, implying, where I will get you something that you like ; and, as in the case of the above verb to coax, adopted by travesty for a like part of speech, which in course of use has been extended into the import of—to entice weak minds by paltry undue allurements for some selfish purpose. Kock, cook, coquus.

HE BROW-BEAT HIM.

He intimidated him, overawed him, reduced him to a state of involuntary compliance by dread of what was to follow. Hie berouw biedt hem ; q. e. here the prospect of the penalty [penance] commands his obedience ; in this case the fear of repentance prescribes submission [rules his conduct] ; the dread of regret enforces his compliance. Hie, hier, here. Berouw, regret, repentance, penitence, sorrow for what is done. Bieden, gebieden, to bid, to command, to rule. Hie berouw biedt hem, sounds he brow-beat him. JOHNSON says the phrase is as brow and beat, in the import of, to depress with severe brows. But why does beat imply depress ? A man may frown at another, but not insure obedience by so doing ; but the dread of consequences, as the original phrase expresses, may and does generally ensure refraining from intended perseverance in action. The term brow falling by analogy of sound into the travesty has mixed up in the expression an idea of knitting the brow and frowning, that in truth has nothing to do with it, and caused its frequent misapplication. Instead of a reference to the check of a man's own conscience, which is the true meaning, it has been used as a check produced by the frown of another person upon him. And the absurdity of making an eye-brow into a stick or cat-o-nine-tails has kept its ground unmolested in common conversation.

WITH A ROD OF IRON.

As in the expression, he governs [rules] with a rod of iron, and meaning like a savage, by fury, irrational violence, outrage, domineering. Wijse er rood af arre aen; q. e. he shows by his countenance that he is red with rage upon the occasion; the redness of his face betrays his being in a fury thereat, and thus implying a temper manifesting itself in its relations with others, by the usual symptoms of being actuated by rage and fury, instead of being under the controul of reason and moderation. The original and travesty sound alike, arre aen, sounds iron. An iron rod is for a bed-curtain or a lightning conductor, and not for a mean of rule. In the phrases sceptre of iron, iron tears, iron years of war, IRON stands in the sense of these objects being used or brought forward by rage, fury, violence, ungovernable temper, and not duly or proceeding from any due motive.

“I will converse with IRON * witted fools—
And unrespective boys; none are for me
That look unto me with considerate eyes.”

SHAKSPEARE.

Arre, erre, ire, and ira are the same word. Aenwijsen, wijsen aen, to designate, to demonstrate, to point out. Rood, red, also wicked, malitious, deceitful, malignant.

* Fools under the guidance of their furious irrational tempers, furious madmen.

BEAT.

As in the expressions, he beat him at whist, the bay mare beat the grey horse, &c. Biedt; q. e. takes the upper hand of [the command over], subjects the other to him, has the controul over, commands, is uppermost, has the superiority over. Biedt, the third person present, of bieden, ghebieden, in the foregoing import, sounds beat.

“ Yon souls of geese,
That bear the shapes of men, how have you run
From slaves that apes would BEAT.”—SHAKSPEARE.

“ Five times, Marcius,
Have I fought with thee, so often hast thou BEAT me.”
SHAKSPEARE.

BEAT.

As when we say, he beat down the price in the market. Beet; q. e. lowers, makes to go down, causes to become lower. The third person present of beeten, beten, to lower, to cause to sink down, to put down; and thus in regard to price or bargain, to better it, to make it cheaper; and groundedly the same word with baten, baeten, baatten, boeten, to better, to amend, to improve, to mend, to do good to, to be of use to, to piece up, to botch, and formerly used by us in the shape of to bete. Hence the French abattre and our to bate, to abate. To bate [abate] a nuisance, is, to correct [mend, to put down] a nuisance, to better the state which caused the subject in question to be a nuisance. To bate a demand, is, to lower a demand, and thus to make it a better purchase [bargain]. The storm abates, the storm lessens, mends, goes down. Un abattement de cœur et d'esprit, is, a sinking [a lowering] of the heart and spirit.

“ Phabus, that first found art of medecine,
[Quoth she] and coud in every wight 'is care,

Remedy and rede *, by herbis he knew fine †,
 Yet to himselfe his conning was full bare,
 For love had him so boundin in a snare,
 All for the daughter of the King Admete,
 That all his craft ne coud his sorowe BETE ‡. " CHAUCER.

" But what and she my balis BETE §,
 And be to me curteis and swete,
 She is nothing full certain,
 Lovers she put in full grete pain. IBID.

" Pipin he couth, and fishin, and nets BETE ||,
 And cuppis turn, and wrastle wel and shete." IBID.

" Thy temple shall I worship evir mo,
 And on thine aulter, where I ryde or go,
 I wol don sacrifice, and firis BETE ¶." IBID.

" So that the Night seemed sprad upon the yerth, if then the wind that hight Boreas, i sent out of the Cave of the Countre of Thrace, BETETH  this night, that is to saine, chaseth it awaie, and discovereth the closed day, thou shinith Phœbus."—IBID. BOETH.

" Usury BEATS down the price of land, for the employment of money is chiefly either merchandizing or purchasing ; and usury way-lays both."—BACON.

TO BEAT THE HOOF.

Properly explained by JOHNSON to go on foot, to walk ; but for which meaning he gives no reason ; by its term the expression carries no such sense ; nor has it any but as the sound of one that bore the true import, which I take to have been, t'u biedt de hoef ; q. e. it is necessity which obliges you ; you would not walk if you could afford to ride ; and is an expression analogous to that of to

* Council, advice. † Find.

‡ Better, lessen, diminish.

§ Better [diminish] my sufferings [woes].

|| Mend, make better.

¶ Mend, better by stirring and adding fuel when wanted.

 Abateth, lessens, betters, improves.

pad the hoof, already explained in the first volume of this essay. Biedt as explained in the penultimate article. Hoef, behoef, necessity, want, indigence, destitution.

A HUNT.

As the implied manner of following or pursuing the object intended to be taken or found, the way of catching or obtaining the object of the pursuit in question, has groundedly no reference to any mode of attaining the object; nothing to do with hounds or dogs of any kind, but seems to me simply as the travesty of Er haend; q. e. er hou-end; i. e. a holding, a catching hold of, a taking fast, a grasping, a griping, a seizing, the means or way not being necessarily imported in the term itself. The Dutch hauden, houden, our old to halte and modern to hold, the German halten and the Anglo-Saxon halden are a same word, and instance the interchanging phases of the sounds and literal forms of a, o, u. So that a hunt is simply an indefinite catching or taking; manner [ways, means, form] being indefinitely implied by the term itself. To hunt is formed from the above in its substantive sense, and thus to put in action the implied means of taking [catching] the object in point; and is in fact the same word with our old to hent and to henten, as well as with the French hanter and our to hant, to haunt, formerly to hanten, as well as the Latin hendere in prehendere. JOHNSON and others fancy the term to be grounded in hound [a dog] and to be as the Anglo-Saxon hunstan; but has hunstan any thing to do with hund? does it not mean to catch or take hold of by any means? We say, to HUNT out a passage in a book; to HUNT out for an argument; to HUNT up evils by thought, &c.; and what can a hound or dog of any kind have to do there? Our term hunter was once spelt henter.

"For sometime bea we * Godd 'is instruments,
And menis to don his commandements,
What so him lust upon his cretures,
In divers acts and in divers figures.
Withoutin him we have no might certeine,
If that him list to stondin there ageyne.

And sometime, at our prayer, han we leve,
Only the body, not the soule, to greve ;
Witness of Job to whom we didden wo ;
And sometime have we might of bothe two,
This is to saine, of body and soule eke,
And sometime we ben suff'rid for to seke
Upon a man and don his soule unrest,
Not his body, and all is for the best :
When he withstandith our temptacion,
It is a cause of his salvacion,
Albeit that it was not our entent,
He shold be safe, but that we shold him HENT †."

CHAUCER.

" But we then ben high aboven, siker from all tumulte and wode noise warene stored and enclosed in soche a Paleis, wither as the clatering or anoying folie maie not attaine, we scorne soche raveners, and HENTERS ‡ of foulest thynges,"

IBID. BOETH.

"My boldenesse is turned to shame
For false fortune played a game,
At chesse with me, alas the while !
The trayteresse false and ful of gyle
That all behothet §, and nothing HALTE ||,
She goth upright, and yet she halte ¶."—IBID.
"I've heard myself proclaim'd ;
And by the happy hollow of a tree
Escap'd THE HUNT.

SHAKSPEARE.

* The devil, who speaks here in the plural number, as if we devils, in reference to his various forms, characters, and figures he is presumed to take for his various purposes of deception.

† Catch, take, lay hold of. † Hunters.

§ Promises, as the Dutch beheeten, in the same sense.

|| Holds, keeps, makes fast.

¶ Limpes, goes lame, and the same word at bottom as the forgoing to halte, which is to hold or come to a stop in the going on, to go on with stoppings, and we say, he has a halt in his gait, in the sense of he has a going on with intermitting holdings or stopping, and thus an irregular manner of going on.

“Evil shall HUNT the violent man to overthrow him.”
PSALMS.

To hunt down a criminal, to hunt for fleas, to hunt for an argument; to hunt a fox or elephant, are equally sound phrases. The u in the term belongs to the primordial hou-en, to hold.

To be haunted by a ghost, is to be hunted [pursued] by a ghost. To haunt a place, is to keep on coming to it, to pursue the coming to it. His mind is haunted by his evil conscience, his mind is pursued by his evil conscience. So that to haunt is used in the direction of to pursue and to overtake [reach]. Hand belongs to the same primordial verb, and so does the Dutch handteeren, to frequent, to continue, to go or come to. But hand is in the simpler direction of a holding, a grasp; of this, in another page.

“I do HAUNT the battle thus,
Because some tell me thou are a king.”—SHAKSPEARE.

“I have charged thee not to HAUNT about my doors,
In honest plainess thou hast heard me say
My daughter's not for thee.” IBD.

“Where they most breed and HAUNT, I have observ'd
The air is delicate.” IBD.

CROSS AND PILE.

As in the phrase, to play at cross and pile, and meaning to toss up a piece of coin, in the usual way, for a decision of the point in question; the cross being formerly the dexter mark of the money of the day and the winning side when it came up. Kruys endt peil; cross terminates the business, decides the question, wins the stake, puts an end to the affair. Kruys, dextra pars nummi, pars antica nummi, cruce plerumque insignita. Munte [the mint mark] was, pars postica, sive latus sinistrum nummi, and the losing side; and kruys of munte worpen, was, as we now should say, to toss up heads or tails, which last phrase has been explained in the first volume of this Essay. Enden, eynden, to end, to finish, to terminate. Peil, the affair, that which was to be done, the whole task, and sounds pile.

"This I humbly conceive to be perfect boy's play; Cross, I win, and PILE, you lose, or what's your's is mine, and what's mine is my own."—SWIFT.

"Neither CROSS AND PILE, nor ducks and drakes are quite so ancient as handy dandy."—ARBUTHNOT AND POPE.

HANDY DANDY.

As the play or dance on which the hands are alternately given and the places changed. Hand dij! d' hand dij! q. e. the hand, thou! the hand, thou! your hand! your hand! and is as the call of one dancer to the other, to give or take the hand, as is done while they alternately change places with each other. D'hand, de hand, the hand. Dij, thou, thee, you. The original words sound handy, dandy.

"See how yond justice rails upon yond simple thief! Hark, in thine ear; change places, and, HANDY DANDY, which is the justice, which is the thief?"—SHAKSPERE.

"Neither cross nor pile, nor ducks and drakes, are quite so ancient as HANDY DANDY."—ARBUTHNOT AND POPE.

DUCKS AND DRAKES.

As the boys play by skimming a flat stone along the surface of the water, so as to cause it to make as many bounds or ricochets as the skimmer's strength and dexterity can enforce. The superiority, in the play, is decided by the greatest number of times the stone touches and bounds upon the surface in consequence of the way it is slung from the hand of the performer. D'hach's aen der reyckes; q. e. the hazard [event] is upon the touches, the issue of the game depends upon the number of bounds [separate touchings] made on the surface of the water. When we say, he has made ducks and drakes with his money, it is merely in the sense of, he has thrown it away childishly and hopelessly; and the stone is the boy's throw for a childish purpose and sinks at the end of its career to be lost in the water. Hach, in which the ch, as formerly with us, sounds ck, has been repeatedly explained in foregoing articles, as, chance, hazard, event, happening, fortune. D'hach's, de hach is, the event [game] turns upon, sounds as we pronounce ducks. Raeck, reyck, touch, blow, is properly as raecke, reycke, the contraction of raecking, reycking, the participle present of raecken, reycken, to touch, to reach, and thus as the touching or reaching; so that aen der reyckes, is, on the touchings, and sounds and drakes.

“ Neither cross nor pile, nor DUCKS AND DRAKES, are quite so ancient as handy dandy. See preceding article.

OVER HEAD AND EARS.

As in the expressions, over head and ears in love [in debt, in misery, in difficulties, in poetry, in music] &c. &c., and always implying an over ardour [excess of passion] as the cause. It is the over ardour in the gratification of our pursuits and pleasures that brings on debt by a too great expenditure of our means. Overheet hand hier's; q. e. in this case there is an over ardent agent, it is evident too great ardour is the agent [cause] of what we see [what takes place]. And hand is here in the sense in which it is used in the phrase, I have had no hand in all this, that is, I have had no agency [I have been no agent, I have not been the cause] of all this. Overheet, over hot, too much heated, too ardent, over fiery, over eager, over passionate, over affectionate, too attached to. Hier's, hier is, here is. In this case JOHNSON tells us the phrase is, as, over the whole person. But where is the use of adding the word ears after head, for surely if a man is into any mess over the head, we do not want to be told his ears are in the same pickle? Besides what can the immersion of the ears have to do in relation to the quantum of either love or debt. Auricular confession, we may understand, but auricular immersion, would puzzle any one. Over heet hand hier's sounds over head and ears, dropping the aspirate in hand and hier.

"In jingling rhymes well fortified and strong,
He fights entrench'd o'er head and ears in song," GRANVILLE.

HEAD AND SHOULDERS.

As when we say, he brought in the subject head and shoulders, and mean, he brought the subject in when there was no occasion, at a wrong or unseasonable moment, when it was not called for by the circumstances of the case, and thus improperly, unduly, wrongly. Heet aen schuld dere's; q. e. to be heated, even in that which may be your duty to do, is to do wrong; when you have what you are bound to do to perform, to act with heat [passion] is mischievous [faulty, injurious]. Heet, rash, passionate, hot, hasty, precipitate. Aen, concerning, in, upon the occasion of. Schuld, schoud, obligation, debt, duty. The moral of the expression, is that the good effect of all we do depends upon its being done at its proper moment, and in a proper manner. Dere, deyre, hurt, injury. 'S, is, is. The best intention is often defeated by the time and manner of carrying it into execution. Schuld, dere's sounds shoulders. JOHNSON tells you the expression head and shoulders implies, by force. But why? for surely there is nothing in the form of the two words which will lead to such meaning. These two parts of the body are uncombineable in action; and the phrase if not referred from its travestied to its original form is sheer nonsense. How a mind, of the grasp of JOHNSON's, ould pass in review the numerous files of similarly constructed phrases belonging to a language of which he was expounding the terms and reconstructing the lexicography, without once perceiving, or at least acknowledging, the impossibility of accounting for them in their present literal forms, seems to me an instance of one of the most remarkably absences in genius to be met with in the whole sphere of literature. By how many absurdities has his single deficiency of insight occasioned his great and unparalleled work to be blurred.

In regard to SHOULDER, in the unadulterated sense of that term, it is as the Dutch schouder, cholder, schulder, and seems to me to be derived from schouwen, to show, to point out, also to expose a view; and to be as schouder, in the import of he pointer out, or that which supplies the means of giving the required direction to the arm and index finger towards the object intended to be shown, and could we do so without the joint intended by that term? Shoulder is also used in the sense of a prominence, as the two are to the upper side extremities of the square of our body. It is also used as a trope for strength; and it is within the region of that part of our body we naturally place any load we have to carry, upon us. To shoulder out of a place, is to show the way out of it, to direct the going out of it, though, owing to the term shoulder, generally construed as an actual shoving by the arm; but do we, or can we either shove or remove any thing by a shoulder, unless we put it upon that part and carry it? and this is not what is meant by the expression. Schoudt, schout, a district-magistrate or judge, a sheriff, bailiff, is from a same source, and as the one who reviews, shows and decides guilt or debt, he who looks out as Justice in the various relations of society. Schoudt [schout] by nacht [one who watches for the others in the night time, the looker out for happenings in the night] is a term used both for a rear-admiral, a patrole, and a mid-wife; and our scout, as spy, is the same word with the Dutch schout, in the above meaning. To scout a man out of society, is, like to shoulder him out of a room, to show him out of it, to direct him to leave it. I suspect the French term écout, and écout, as well as the Latin au cultare, to listen, to be upon the watch with the ear, to keep the ear upon the guard, belong to this stock. HORNE TOOKE derives shoulder from the Anglo-Saxon scylan, the Dutch scheelen, to separate, to divide; but that would do for an joint or divider of parts, and could never, by any conjuration, bring out either shoulder, schulder, or schouder. The word was formerly spelt, with us schoude, which is the Dutch schoud, as shoulder.

“The due fashion of byrthe is this, first the head cometh forward, then foloweth the neck and SHOUDES.”

BYRTH OF MANKYNDE

“When you rivet your pin into a hole, your pin must have a SHOULDER * to it, thicker than the hole is wide, that the SHOULDER * slip not through the hole as well as the shank.”

MOXON

HORNE TOOKE also thinks our term shilling, the Dutch schelling, a silver piece of money, is corruptly written for shillen, as scylen, and so an aliquot part of a pound; but shilling is as schelling, the participle present of schellen, to ring, to chink, as pure silver should when tried by the test, and thus as, nummus tinniens sono argent solidi integrique. And schelm, as a notorious thief or rascal, is no other than the contraction of this schelling, as the making a noise in the world, by his villainous practices, and thus becoming notorious by them. And we say such a one is a notoriou rasical or thief.

* Here evidently as an extending prominence on each side as the shoulders are.

“Lord Strutt's money shines as bright, and CHINKS as well, as that of Squire South.”—ARBUTHNOT.

“When not a guinea CHINKED on Martin's boards,
And Atwill's self was drained of all his boards.”

SWIFT.

“The particular RINGING sound in gold, distinct from the sound in other bodies, has no particular name.”—LOCKE.

“People that hit upon a thought that tickles them, will be still bringing it in by HEAD AND SHOULDERS, over and over, in several companies.”—L'ESTRANGE.

“They bring in even figure of speech, HEAD AND SHOULDERS, by main force, in spite of nature and their subject.”—FELTON.

The word shoulder in the expression, shoulder of mutton, is in the sense of an arm of mutton, and thus in the ground sense of the word shoulder as above explained, but analogously extended to a sheep.

HEAD.

As in the phrases, he made head against his enemies; he made head against the storm; he gave his horse his head, &c.; and in the sense of he took means to defend [guard, protect, preserve] himself against his enemies [the storm]; he left his horse to his own guardianship [care of himself], let him go his own way, the way he chose for his own safety. Hoede [huede]; q. e. custody, protection, guard, defence, safeguard, conservation, caution; with which our heed, formerly spelt hed and hede, is the same word.

“Sometimes has Henry Bolingbroke made HEAD * against my power.”—SHAKSPEARE.

“Two valiant gentlemen making HEAD against them, seconded by half a dozen more, made forty run away.”

RALEIGH.

“He gave his able horse the HEAD,
And bounding forward struck his agile heels
Against the panting sides of his poor jade,
Up to the rowel hilts.”

SHAKSPEARE.

* Guarded himself [defended, protected, himself] against my power.

ARM.

As the limb that turns about by the shoulder joint, the same word as the Dutch and German arm, which is the contraction of arring, the antiquated participle present of arren, to turn, to turn upon, and thus as the turning limb, or that which turns by its joining. Hence also harre, a hinge. The Latin armus seems also to belong to this source. The arm of a tree, is simply as the turning of the tree at that point, and so is an arm of the sea [or river].

HEADSTRONG.

In the sense of ungovernable, unmanageable, furious. Heete's ster-wrongh; q. e. flying in a rage is stark mischief; becoming furious is sheer offence [wrong, grievance, injury]; fireing with passion, must lead to nothing but unmixed wrong. Heete is the participle present of heeten, to become heated, to grow warm, to wax hot, and thus as growing hot. S, is, is. Sterre, ster, stark, quite, immoveably. Wrongh, wronck, wrong injury.

“ He ill aspires to rule
Cities of men or HEADSTRONG multitudes,
Subject himself to anarchy within.” MILTON.

“ How now my HEADSTRONG ! where have you been gadding,
Where I have learnt me to repent the sin
Of disobedient opposition.” SHAKSPEARE.

“ An example of HEADSTRONG inconsiderate zeal, no less fearful than Achitophel from proud and irreligious wisdom.” HOOKER.

JOHNSON resolves the term formally into head and strong; but what's that? a headstrong man is any thing but a strong headed man, and what else is to be made of the two words in their literal form?

HEADY.

Passionate, rash, furious, foaming. Heet dije; q. e. mounting into heat, rising up [coming] to a state of heat; waxing hot; increasing to a state of foam, froth; bringing on fury, fire. Heet, heat, a heated or furious state. Dijen, dijghen, dijden, to augment, to increase, to promote, to grow up, of which dije is as the contracted participle present dijng. JOHNSON grounds the term in head, but there are, I hope, at least as many cool heads as hot heads. Besides what has the word head to do in the phrase heady current? It is really treating head as if it were a fire-place or volcano, but even these are sometimes without signs of heat.

“Take pity of your town and of your people,
While yet the cool and temp’rate wind of grace
O’erblows the filthy and contagious clouds,
Of HEADY murder, spoil, and villainy.”—SHAKSPEARE.

“Those only are regarded who are true to their party; and all the talent requir’d is to be hot, to be heady, to be violent on one side or the other.”—TEMPLE.

“Men, naturally warm and HEADY, are transported with the greatest flush of good nature.”—ADDISON.

“I was entertained with a sort of wine, which was very HEADY, but otherwise seem’d to be sack.”—BOYLE.

“Never came reformation in a flood,
With such a HEADY current scow’ring faults;
Nor ever hydra-headed wilfulness,
So soon did lose its seat.”

SHAKSPEARE.

A MALKIN.

A female scarecrow, an untidy slovenly female object, a disgustfully bedizened woman; a woman rendered a fright by the arrangement or tawdriness of the dress. Molikinne [as the feminized Molik]; q. e. a scarecrow, a frightful figure, an object of disgust, and thus a female scarecrow. And moli-kinne has the precise sound of our pronunciation of malkin. Molik, is the travesty of Moloch, the horrid king, to whose idol human sacrifices were offered; but, in the travesty, used in a ludicrous and contemptuous sense. Inne is a usual feminizing suffix; een god, a god, eene godinne, a goddess, een graaf, a count, eene gravinne, a countess, &c. Grimalkin, I take to have a same source, and the adjunct gri is the metathesis of giere, greedy, devouring; so that grimalkin, as the cat, is the devouring [greedy] terror of its peculiar prey, and the travesty of gieremolikinne; q. e. greedy scarecrow, frightener, or, probably, as the nearer sense of devourer of its live prey, and a trope of the blood-devouring monster. JOHNSON resolves mal-kin into mol, Mary, and kin, the diminutive termination; but why should little moll be necessarily a scarecrow or fright? The gri in grimalkin he construes into the French gris, grey, so that grimalkin would be as grey little Moll, and that the trope for a cat!

“First Molocu, horrid king, besmeared with blood
Of human sacrifice and parents tears,
Though for the noise of drums and timbrels loud,
Their children's cries unheard, that passed through fire
To this grim idol.” MILTON.

“The kitchen MALKIN pins
Her richest lockram' bout her reeky neck,
Climbing the walls to eye him.” SHAKESPEARE.

“GRIMALKIN to domestick vermin sworn
An everlasting foe, with watchful eye,
Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap
Pretending her fell claws, to thoughtless mice
Sure ruin.” PHILIPS.

TRASH.

Worthless stuff, matter of little value, rubbish, refuse, offal. 'T rys; q. e. the tops or shoots of bushes or hedges; that portion which is clipped off and treated as mere refuse, left to be trodden under foot as not worth taking away. Hence the verb to trash, in the sense of to clip [to lop, to crop, to top] hedge rows and young trees; and also to humble, to degrade. 'Trys, 'et rys, het rys, twig-ends, young shoots, the year's shoots; also faggots of these; and sounds as we pronounce trash.

“Who steals my purse, steals TRASH; 'tis something, nothing;
 'Twas mine, 't is his; and has been slave to thousands;
 But he that filches from me my good name,
 Robs me of that which not enriches him
 And makes me poor indeed.”

SHAKSPEARE.

“Weak foolish man! will heaven reward us there,
 With the same TRASH mad mortals wish for here.”

POPE.

“Being once perfected how to grant suits,
 How to deny them; whom t' advance, and whom
 To TRASH for evertopping.”

SHAKSPEARE.

“Not such as was fit to be imposed upon hard-hearted Jews, to encumber and TRASH them, but such as becomes an ingenuous people.”—HAMMOND's Pract. Catechism.

NECK OR NOTHING.

As when we say, it was neek or nothing with him, in reference to some venturesome, dangerous, ticklish undertaking, in which the person in question was engaged, either by design or chance; one by the event of which either great good or great evil must happen to him. Na heck [n'hech] hoore nauw sieing; q. e. when you come near to, under the, portcullis [trap-fall of the town gate] you must look sharp about you [implying either for fear it should be let down and enclose you a prisoner or else kill you, by coming upon you]; so that the expression comprehends a crisis by which you may be either killed or taken, or succeed in your attempt, for the risk evidently applies to some assailant or combatant engaged in the storming or surprising some fortified town, and refers to a state of things gone by for ages; but one to which all the travesties of this nature must necessarily relate; and a circumstance always to be kept in view in the developement of their original structure. Na, naa, nae, near, nigh. Heck, portcullis, fall-gate or sliding bar inside the principal gate, secreted above within grove, and so contrived as to be let down at w either to enclose the assailants who have ventu within it, or keep others out; porta catara pendula et recidens. Na heck, n'heck, soul neck. Hooren, behooren, to become, to suit, to proper for. Nauw, narrowly, carefully, exact. Sieing, the old form of the participle present of si to see, to look at, to attend to; and nauw sie sounds as we utter the word nothing. Ho dropping the aspirate, sounds or.

STARLINGS.

The starlings of a bridge, as the projecting sp abutments, lean-tos of its piers; a term omitted JOHNSON, but as genuine English as any word that language and the familiar and technical t for the object intended by it. Star-hellings; q the radiating spurs of the piers of the bridge; star-cornered abutments or lean-tos of the piers; projecting inclined supports of the piers; les t des piles d'un pont; the inclined supports of piers. Starre, star, sterre, ster, sterne, star; also any thing with radiating projections or corn Helling, a lean-to, an inclined support, a sna spur, as expressed by the French talus; and si hellings sounds precisely as we pronounce starlin as may be proved by trial.

“The strong-based promontory
Have I made shake, and pluck'd up by the spurs
The pine and cedar.” SHAKSPE

BRIDGE.

[Spelt by CHAUCER and his cotemporaries, br brigge] the same word with the Dutch brug, b ghe in the same sense, and the contraction berugging, the making a back to, the beback indorsatio from rug, rugghe [back] spelt by CHAU rigg, rigge, riggin and used in his day in the same meaning, viz. back. So that a bridge is as a backing or support made over a river [water]; the bridge of the nose, is the bone which supports the nose; and the bridge of a fiddle, is that which supports the strings of such instrument. But, I suspect, rug, rugghe is as the ellipsis of rugghebeen, back-bone, the upright line of bone which supports the body, termed by CHAUCER riggin-been; for rugghe, rug, of itself, as BILDERDIJK observes, is as rig, rij-ig, from rij, straightness, uprightness, and thus as the straight direction of the body or the line which holds the body straight. Hence richel, rijchel, rijghel, a rule, and also a bolt, for which last sense of the word the Dutch have the term bout, both in the import of bolt, as a straight fastening bar, and also as the club-headed arrow for the cross-bow, in both which last senses our bolt is the same word. We say, as upright as a bolt, and as straight as an arrow. Propably the Latin regula is no other than the above rijghel, reghel, a ruler or rule; our terms the rigging and to rig, both belong to this stock of words, in the sense of regulated supporting, and to make a regular support for the sails, &c. We say to back a person in the sense of to support him. To back a man in or out at play, is to support your opinion that he will be in or that he will be out at the play, that he will win or that he will lose.

“And when he fond he was yhurt, the Pardonere gan to threte
And swore by seynt Amyas, that he shuld abigg,
With stroks hard and sore even oppon the RIGG *.”

CHAUCER.

“ Thereto she couthe skipp, and make a game,
As any kid or calfe foll’wing its dame ;
Her mouth was swete as brakit or the meth,
Or horde of applis layd in hay or heth.
Winsing she was as is a jolly colt,
Long as a mast, and upright as a BOLT.”

CHAUCER.

* Back, back bone.

RIDGE, both in the phrase of a ridge of hills as well as the ridges formed by the plough, belongs also to the above family of words, in the sense of a row or series of hills and of the straight lines formed by the plough.

HORNE TOOKE derives the foregoing terms to rig and rigging from the Anglo-Saxon wrigan, to cover, but what has the rigging of a ship to do with covering; the covering of the ship is the deck, and the covering of the deck, when one is wanted, is the awning. We say to rig a fleet, as well as to rig a ship, but we dont mean either to cover a fleet or to furnish a fleet with covering.

BODKIN.

A dagger, a short sword; also the kind of needle which serves to draw thread, ribband, or tape along the loop to where required to be drawn. Bod eck inne; q. e. direction puts in the point [the edge]; according as directed by the hand the point enters; the angle penetrates the place to which it is pointed. Bod, gebod, direction, order, mandate. Eck, edge, corner, angle, as ec, ac, eg, sharpness, pointedness. Inne as the third person of the potential mood of innen, in the sense of to make to go in, or enter. And bodkin in the phrase to ride bodkin is the same word, in the import of to ride by a corner or end, and not by the whole seat as when there is due room for all the three people. A person who rides bodkin in a chaise is one who has a seat by an edge as well as on an edge, or small portion of the whole; one who edges in or on.

“ To Rome again reparith Julius,
 With his triumphe laureate full hie
 But on a time Brutus and Cassius,
 That evre' had of his hie estate envie,
 Full privilie had made conspiracie,
 Agenst his Julius, in subtil wise
 And caste the place in which he should ydie
 With BODEKINS, as I shall you devise.

This Julius to the Capitoll went
 Upon a daie, as he was wont to gone,
 And in the Capitoll anon him hent *,
 This false Brutus, and his other fone †,
 And stickid him with BODEKINS anone
 With many a wounde, &c. &c.”

CHAUCER.

“ For who would bear the whips and scorns of time,
 The oppressor’s wrong, the proud man’s contumely,
 The pang of despis’d love, the law’s delay,
 The insolence of office, and the spurns
 That patient merit of th’ unworthy takes,
 When he himself might his quietus make
 With a bare BODKIN ‡ ? Who would fardels § bear
 To grunt and sweat under a weary life ;
 But that the dread of something after death,—
 The undiscover’d country, from whose bourn
 No traveller returns,—puzzles the will ;
 And makes us rather bear those ills we have,
 Than fly to others that we know not of ?
 Thus conscience does make cowards of us all ;
 And thus the native hue of resolution
 Is sickly’d o’er with the pale cast of thought ;
 And enterprizes of great pith and moment,
 With this regard their currents turn awry,
 And lese the name of action.”

SHAKSPEARE.

“ Thei laugh and daunce, thei trippe and sing,
 And laie nougnt up for ther living,
 But in the taverna all dispendeth
 The winning whiche that God ‘hem sendeth ;
 Than goeth he FARDILS for to bere,
 With a gode chere as he did ere,
 To swinke and travile he not fainith,
 For to robbin he disdainith.”

CHAUCER.

JOHNSON has adopted SKINNER’s etymology for bodkin, viz. boddiken, which he explains to be a small body. If in any language there ever could be

* Caught him, pursued him. † Foes, enemies.

‡ Dagger, sword.

§ Burthens, probably as vaer-deels; q. e. the portions to be borne, the shares we have to bear, the fixed [loads] allotments for us to support [carry], whence the Italian fardello and the French fardéau [burthen]. Vaer, veer, voer, vectura, the carrying, the carriage, the bearing, the loading. Deel, deijl, portion, part, division, proportion, distribution, of which deels is a plural.

such a term as boddiken in that sense, how would it apply either to a sword, dagger, needle, or the one who rides between two on the edge of the seat, or on the edge of his posteriors; for he may be one with a very large body as well as a very small one? He tells you also fardel is as the Italian fardello and French fardeau; but not what they are.

WITH A WITNESS.

As when we say, he has done it with a witness, and mean he has done it effectually [properly, thoroughly, completely]. The expression is emphatical, and now only used in familiar discourse Wijse er wite in is; q. e. shewing there is knowledge [science, skill] in it; demonstrating there a complete acquaintance with the subject in question; and thus importiug it was done as effectually and completely as a thorough knowledge of the subject could insure. In its literal form the phrase has no meaning whatever; but is sheer nonsense. JOHNSON says, without accounting for it in any shape, it is a low expression; but what does he mean by low, for the phrase, though familiar, is as much in use among the upper and educated class of society as among the opposite class. It is not an expression in any way derogating from good breeding or high station in society; and certainly not a low-spirited one. Wete, weet, wite, witte, science, knowledge, skill, instruction, according to BILDERDIJK as wetenschap, knowledge; and probably grounded in vatten, to comprehend, to take in, to conceive, which gives rise also to vijten, now spelt vitten, to question, to carp at, to cavil at, to doubt about as knowing better, and thus, as a præterite formation, that which is conceived, known, understood. The Gothick has witan for weten or wijten, to know—It is evident there is a connection between weten, to know, to wit, and wetten, to whet, to sharpen, for we say a sharp fellow, for a knowing fellow, and the Dutch geslepen [the participle past of slippen, to whet, to sharpen] for sly, cunning, acute; but to develope the source of the connection between these terms would lead to an article of too great extent for this place or for the purpose here in view. Our wit, as sense, clearly belongs here, and is as a mean of conception, knowing, understanding, and the five wits, is synonymous with the five senses, as the five means of perception, by which all knowledge is obtained by us; and in this sense we say, “he was frightened out of his wits.” Wijse, as the participle present of wijzen, to shew, to demonstrate, to point out. In is, as with us. Wijse er wite in is, sounds with a witnis, and witnis is the way we utter witness in our current speech.

“Here was a blessing handed out with the first pairs of animals at their creation; and it had effect with a witness.”

WOODWARD.

“Now gall is bitter WITH A WITNESS ;
And love is all delight and sweetness.”

PRIOR.

“The king your father was reputed for
A prince most prudent, of an excellent
And unmatch’d wit and judgment.”

SHAKSPEARE.

“They never meet but there’s a skirmish of wit between them.”

“———Alas, in his last conflict four of his five wits went halting off, and now is the whole man govern’d by one.”

SHAKSPEARE.

“If our wits run the wild goose chace, I have done; for thou hast more of the wild goose in one of thy wits, than I have in my whole five.”—SHAKSPEARE.

———“I had a son,
Now outlaw’d from my blood, he sought my life;
The grief has craz’d my wits.”

SHAKSPEARE.

“Nowe, my gode eme *, for Godd ‘is love I pray
[Quoth she] come of and tell me what it is,
For bothe I am agast for what ye wol say,

* The mother’s brother; but I suspect the same word with the old Dutch am, tutor, guardian, foster-father, and

And eke it longith me to wîr * i wis †,
 For whethir it be wel, or be amis,
 Say on, let me not in this fere ydwel.”

CHAUCER.

“ For sithe he might not come and gone,
 As he was whilome wonte to done,
 He might it sone wîr ‡ and se,
 But now al otherwise wot † he.”

IDEM.

“ And yet liveth thy wife that is attempre of wîr †, and passyng other women in clennesse of chastitie.”

IDEM.

“ And verily it semid that he had
 The selvin wîr †, but yet to let her go
 His herte misgave him evirmo.”

IDEM.

“ For by this werke North, Southe, Weste, ne Este
 There n’ is yfostrid man, ne birde, ne beste,
 It dothe no gode, to my wîr †, but annoyeth. IDEM.

A PET.

A pet, a favourite, something preferred to another; the object of more attention than is bestowed in common; a darling, a fondling. Er bete; q. e. there is that which is profited [that which is benefited], more than the others; the amme, bringer up, foster-mother, nurse, alumna, alma mater, in Spanish ama where ama is used for the nurse's husband; and [as the mother is the nurse ordained by nature] the mother's brother, and so uncle; and I have little doubt the import of eme, as mother's brother, arises out of am, as the nurse's [by nature's logic, mother's] brother. Y tambien vulgarmente se llama amo el marido de la ama de algun nino; and amo is also the name given among the common people to the husband of the nurse that has brought up some child. Of the source of the above Dutch am, amme, in another place, merely observing in this, that am is held by BILDERDIJK to be the same word with the Latin am in composition [ambire, ambitio, ambactus, ambigo, &c.] at bottom the Dutch om and German um, about, around, and thus in the import of watching, attending to, over, about, never absent from.

* To know.

† Certain, as the Dutch gewis in the same sense.

‡ Know. § Knew. || Wisdom, knowledge, science.

¶ Knowledge, understanding, opinion, thought.

 To my way of thinking, in my opinion, as far as I know.

object of greater benevolence than the rest; that one whose interest is more the subject of the attention of the person in question, than all other objects; that is cockered and coaxed at the expense of the rest. Baten, beten, baeten, to do good to, to profit, to benefit, to increase the prosperity of; and once in use with us in the form of to bete and from bat, bet, baet, profit, lucre, utility, benefit, also in use with us in CHAUCER's time as bete. P and b, as has been often exemplified in this essay, are well known interchanging consonants; the Welchman utters plood for blood; and sound b as p, and bet, bete, sounds pet, pete, the e being pronounced as in let, fret, &c.; and the terminal e, as in our old nouns, having no sound. But the former pronunciation of the word may have been as peet or pete, for pet was once spelt peat. JOHNSON thinks it comes out of the French word petit! An evident whim.

“A pretty PEAT! it is best put finger in the eye
An she knew why.” SHAKSPEARE.

“A citizen and his wife
Both riding on one horse, upon the way
I overtook; the wench a pretty PEAT.” DONNE.

“ Yete is ther none fainir, that would I hete *, Than I to do you ese or else BETE †.” CHAUCER.

IN A PET.

In anger, in a cross humour, in a passion. In er bij 'et; q. e. in anger by that, in a passion at it; in a fury [rage, wrath] at what has happened or been done. Sound b as p, as in the preceding article a pet, and bij 'et sounds pet. In, as with us. Er, erre, ire, anger; and also angry, out of temper, as well as erring, doing wrong, in fault. Er dom, error, state of erring, fault; hence the Latin ira, irasci, error, errare, &c. &c.; and our own ire. Ira, as erre in Dutch has both the sense of anger and fault [mistake]. IRA est libido ulciscendi ejus qui videtur lasisse injuriā.—Ob similis IRAM fugae eò missi erant; where ira in the first sentence is as anger, angry feeling; in the second error, fault, mistake; and in truth what is anger [passion] but a temporary aberration from the due mood of mind and temper? and what is a fault, [mistake] but an error of the mind? We find the e resolving dialectically into the i in passing from the Dutch erren [to err] into the German irren, the same word.

* Say, assert.

† Benefit, profit, use, good.

“Life, given for noble purposes, must not be given up in a ~~PET~~, nor whin'd away in love.”—COLLIER.

“If all the world
Should IN A PET of temperance feed on pulse,
Drink the clear stream, and nothing wear but freeze
Th' all-giver would be unthanked, would be unpraised.

MILTON.

“If we cannot obtain every thing we ask, our next business is to take PET * at the refusal.”—L'ESTRANGE.

PEEVISH.

Irritable, easily provoked, waspish, petulant, of a temper not to be trusted, but to be treated with caution. Bij wie's; q. e. is like a bee; he is one with the nature of a bee, implying easily provoked to sting [to show signs of spite and venom]. Sound b as p, which a welchman would do without being told, and bije wie's sounds peewish [peevish]. JOHNSON'S remark at this word, is; “Junius, with more reason than he commonly discovers, supposes peevish to be formed by corruption from perverse; SKINNER rather derives it from beeish, as we say waspish.” And SKINNER was near hitting the nail on the head, while JUNIUS might as well have looked for the word in Piewit or Pewet as in perverse, which is as stubborn, wrongheaded, selfwilled, contradictory, and without even a shade of either the true import or sound of peevish.

* Here pet is used after the travestied form of the original phrase, and as a substantive in itself, which it is not, but by disguise.

“She is PEEVISH, sullen, froward, Proud, disobedient, stubborn, lacking duty.”

SHAKSPEARE.

“Neither will it be satire or PEEVISH invective to affirm, that infidelity and vice are not diminished.”—SWIFT.

—“I will not presume
To send such PEEVISH tokens to a king.”

SHAKSPEARE.

“Those deserve to be doubly laughed at, that are PEEVISH and angry to no purpose.”—L’ESTRANGE.

OBS. Put waspish in the place of peevish in all the above extracts, and the sense would be as complete and in a same significance.

WORLD.

The Dutch wereld, wareld, more correctly, as BILDERDIJK suggests, warelt, in German welt, werelt, once worold; in Saxon worald, in Friesish worldt. Grounded in the antiquated waren, now wesen, wezen, in the Danish være [read weere]; q. e. to be, to exist. From waren comes the adjective warel, i. e. the being, being, [in Latin ens, in Greek τὸν οὐ] and from that is warelte [world]; so that world is as, all that exists, being of every kind; the collective appearance of all things, that is, of all that which comes within the scope of the senses, or is adduced to us by reason through their agency; as when we see a house, though we may not see its builder, his existence is as surely adduced to our mind by reason as the house by the senses. From this waren [to be] we have our was and were, as the præterite form of the verb I am, in the infinitive to be, now placed by grammarians under the predicament of one of the irregular verbs; a class of verbs arising simply from the loss of the original regular tenses belonging to them, and the gradual intrusion, in course of time and use, of those of other verbs carrying an analogous import.

Warelt had no plural. Like all other words, in the course of use, world has been extended into various secondary imports of meaning; as in, to live in the fashionable world; a man of the world [one who keeps up appearances, does as others do]; there is no believing what the world [appearance] says, &c. &c. The world to come, is the state of being [or the being in a state] of things not perceived by our senses, nor conceived by the mind in point of actual form in our present state; and thus a state of which the certainty may exist without the knowledge of the kind; as we may know tomorrow will come but not what sort of tomorrow it may be. World without end, is simply as a state of being without end. He is for all the world like a monkey, is simply, he is, as far as his being [appearance] shews to us, a monkey.

"Of him all things have both receiv'd their first being, and their continuance to be that which they are."—HOOKER.

"Heaven from all creatures hides the book of fate ;
From brutes what men, from men what spirits know,
Or who would suffer BEING here below." POPE.

"And she began to brest * and wepe anone,
And saide, alas ! for wo, why n're I ded ?
For of this WORLD the faith is al agone ;
Alas ! what shuldin straunge unto me done,
When he, that for my beste frende I wende †
Redith ‡ me love, who shulde it me defende.

Alas, I would have trustid doutiless,
That if that I, through my disavinture,
Had lovid either him or Achilles,
Hector, or any oþer manir creature
Ye n' old have had no mercy ne mesure,
On me, but alwaie had me in repreve ;
This false WORLDE § alas ! who may it leve ||." CHAUCER.

* Burst, burst out, break out.

† Thought, imagined, as the Dutch waend in the same sense.

‡ Councileth, advises; in Dutch raeden, to advise.

§ Appearance, universal appearance of things, and thus in ground sense of the word world as above explained.

|| Believe, trust.

WORD.

Defined by JOHNSON, a single part of speech ; but is, perhaps more correctly, the ground of a part of speech, an idea to be enounced either by mouth or letter. The Dutch woord [antiently waerd], in German wort, and as woorde, woor-edē, waar-edē ; q. e. perceived, conceived, made aware of, noticed ; from waeren, waren, ontwaren, to perceive, to be aware of, to notice ; so that a word is properly a thing noticed by the mind, formed in the mind, ready to be uttered. We say, whatever he might think, he did not say a word, that is, whatever he had in his mind, he did not utter it. He had not a word to say, is as, he had nothing ready in his mind to say. If word implied a thing said or uttered, there was not a word spoken, would be tautological. In the expressions, upon my word ; I give you my word ; word is as waerd, waerd, weerd, worth, value, and thus an insurance according to the estimation you hold me in. In the expression there were some words passed between them, and implying a dispute between them, I suspect words is as the more usual phrase high words, angry words. Word, in its direct import, is connected with ord, begining, and werden, worden, to begin to be, to become. CHAUCER uses worde for motto, device, sentence, conceit, and so a thought.

“ Her gowne wel was embrraudrid certainly
 With stonis sette aftir her owne devise,
 In her purfillis her worde by and by,
Bien et loyalement, as I could devise.”

THE ASSEMBLIE OF LADIES.

GAZETTE.

In the sense of a newspaper, a paper of public intelligence, and, as used by us, borrowed from the French, but originally by them from the Dutch. Gezette ; q. e. article of an ordinance ; section of some authorized fixed regulation for public adoption; and thus as the publication by which such article of laws or regulations were formerly announced from the proper authority, and so a law, ordinance, regulation itself. Gheset, gezette, is now nearly antiquated in the above sense of article [section] of a law; also as law or ordinance. The etymology, given in most dictionaries for the term gazette, is, that the word is as gazeta, a Venetian coin so called, that coin having been the price of a newspaper, the publication of which took its rise in Venice. A mere made up story. Gazzeta was certainly one of the names by which a coin vulgarly called la crazia venetiana [equivalent to our half farthing of former days] was sometimes known; and I believe that fact to be the whole truth there is in the etymological fable of the dictionary makers.

*Omai la fama, che riporta a volo
D' ogn' intorno le nuove e le GAZZETTE *,
Sparge per Malmantil, che armato stuolo
Vien per tagliare a tutt'ile calsette. LIPPI MALON.*

Gezette, geset, is as the participle præterite of seten, zeten, now zitten, to sit, to place, to set, to fix, to settle upon. And our word a set, as in a set of teeth, a set of jewels, a set price, is as set, geset, fixed, stated, settled, and thus an arrangement, row, order, due disposition, settled [stated] number and place in regard to the subject in question. A set of teeth, is the natural number and arrangement of teeth. A set of jewels, the number and arrangement of jewels suited to be worn upon the required occasions. Seat, is as the antiquated sate now sete, seet, and from the same sitten, to sit. In old Dutch site, sitte meant the rump or back-side, as that by which we sit. Die SITE kert er gegen ir dar; he turned his rump to her upon this occasion. So that sete, is as the contraction of seting, sitting; q. e. a sitting, and so a seat. Saddle the Dutch sadel, sadl, zadel, is as the adjective satel, from sate, the old term for seat. Our to set, to sit, to settle, &c., are evident scions of this stock; and so are the Latin terms sedere, sidere, sedes, sedile, sidus [sideris], sedulus, situs, &c. Our old term se, see, a seat, fixed place, now retained only in regard to bishopricks, as diocesan seats, is certainly of this place. Setel, seat, was even lately in use among us, in the same sense under the form of settle.

* Gazette, newspaper. MINUCCI, who explains this word in a note on the above passage, though aware of the term gazetta being used for la crazia, never insinuates the two terms having the least relation to each other beyond the coincidence of letter; and which coincidence is the less to be regarded, as being between two words grounded in different languages. Besides, what reason is there to suppose Venice to have been the place where a newspaper or gazette was first published, and for half a farthing?

“The man, their hearty welcome first exprest,
A common SETTLE drew for either guest,
Inviting each his weary limbs to rest.” DRYDEN.

“The mighty trone, the precious tresore
The glorious septer, royal majeste,
That hath the king Nabuchodonosore,
With tonge unnethis may descrivid be
He twise wanne Hierusalem, that cite,
The vesseles of the temple he with him lad,
At Babylon was his soveraine se *,
In which his glory and delite he had.” CHAUCER.

“Priestis should for no cattill plede,
But chastin 'hem in charite
Ne to no battaile should men lede,
For inhaunsing ther owne degré,
Nat willin sittings in hie se †,
Ne soveraine in hous ne hall.
Worldly worship defie and fie,
Who willith highnes foule shall fall.” IDEM.

“Then if their sit a man yonder on a se †,
Than by necessite behovith it
That certes thine opinion sothe be
That wenist or conjectist that he sit.” IDEM.

* Seat of government, power, a seat. † Seats.

"And on the other side fast by Ysatte the harpir Orion
 And Gacides Chirion,
 And other harpirs many one,
 And the briton Glaskirion,
 And smale harpirs with their glees
 Satte undir 'hem in divers SEES *." CHAUCER.

HE BEAT HIM BLACK AND BLUE.

He punished him severely, but implying justly, according to his desert. Hie bije hiet hin placke aen bije-luy; q. e. here the industrious one orders the rod to be laid on the drone [idle one]; in this case industry causes idleness to be duly punished. The expression he beat him black and blue, is nonsense in its literal form, as the slightest consideration will show. Yet the sound sense of it carries the impress of due chastisement, and none more duly received than by the idle at the hand of the industrious. Hie, hier, here. Bije, bij, the working bee, and so the type of the industrious one. Hin, off hand, at once, hence, from. Placke, ferula, rod, instrument of corporal punishment for idle ones. Bije-luy, the drone-bee, and so the idle one, and sounds blue. Hie bije hiet, sounds he beat. Plack as black, p and b being naturally interchanging sounds. From the travestied form, in course of use, black and blue has been used as the term for the effect of severe beating, but from no other source, for nobody can be made black and blue, except by the help of colours and painting brush.

"Mistress Ford, good heart, is BEATEN BLACK AND BLUE, that you cannot see a white spot about her."—SHAKSPERE.

"And wing'd with speed and fury flew To rescue Knight from BLACK AND BLUE."

HUDIBRAS.

THE BLACK ART.

Magick, necromancy, conjuration, enchantment.
De belacke aart; q. e. the contrivance which

* Seats.

deceives, the deceiving ingenuity, the subtlety which leads astray, the imposing kind of thing, the tricking device. Belacke, the contracted participle present of belacken, belocken, to entice, to ensnare, to deceive, to cajole. Aerd, aart, as ingenuity, contrivance, and the root of our word art and the Latin ars, artis. JOHNSON has not this phrase in his dictionary, though one known to every Englishman, and in daily use.

“ In magick he was deeply read
 As he that made the brazen head,
 Profoundly skill’d in THE BLACK ART,
 As English Merlin, for his heart;
 But far more skilful in the spheres
 Than he was at the sieve and shears.” HUDIBRAS.

A PENNY FOR YOUR THOUGHTS.

A familiar and friendly appeal to one who seems in deep and serious thought, as occupied by some train of thinking which casts an appearance of melancholy over the countenance, and this phrase is made use of by way of dissipating the fit or attack of gloom. Er pene hije voor u, heer, so horte’s; q. e. such carking care as this, is not good for you, Sir, such labouring pain as here, is hurtful for you, Sir, and as much as to say, I dont like to see you give way to this gloomy train of thought and therefore break in upon it to try if I can put it out of your head. Pene, pijn, anxiety, anguish, torment, affliction, labour, and the root of the Latin pœna. the French peine, the Italian pena, and our pain. Hijen, to vex, to molest, to torment, of which hije is as the contracted participle present. Voor u, for you. Heer, sir; and voor u heer, sounds for your. So, in this way, so. Horte, as the contracted participle present of horten, to injure, to hurt, to do mischief to; and so hortes, sounds as we utter the word thoughts. ’S, is, is.

A JAIL-BIRD.

Defined by JOHNSON, one who has been in prison, though implying, by usage, not only one who has been there, but also one who is fit to be there [one who ought never to have been let out], and thus one who has not been bettered by being there; an incorrigible ruffian. But as in most of these travesties, the sense has been infused by the present form of the term, in detriment of the sound one of the original form. Erje hele behoord; q. e. in this case a continued concealment would have been what was proper; in this instance, the one in question had better been kept confined; he was one who ought never to have been let out [suffered to appear again]; he is one who should have ever remained hid [lived in a covered place, confinement]. Je, ever, always. Hele, the contracted participle present of helen, to conceal, and once in use among us under the form of to hele in the same sense. Je hele, sounds as we utter jail. Behoord, is due, behooren, to be due, to belong to, to be proper for; and behoord sounds as we pronounce bird:

“ The parish-priest is but a best *
 Agens me [the monk as confessor] and my compony [fellow-monks],
 That shrewis † ben as gret as I,
 Fro whiche I wol not hide in holde
 No private that me is tolde,
 That I by worde or signe i wis ‡,
 Ne wol make ‘hem know what it is,
 And they wolen also tellin me,
 They HELE § from me no private.” CHAUCER.

“ And som men sain, that delite have we [women]
 To ben holdin stabil, and eke secre,
 And in o purpose ¶ stedfastly to dwell,
 And not bewray  in thing that men us tell.

* Beast. † Villains. ‡ Sure. § Conceal.

¶ One, single, same, whence our term odd, as singular.

 Betray, to benray is probably as the Dutch bevrijden, to befree, let out, let loose.

But that tale is not worth a rak stele *,
Parde we wymen konnin nothing hele." IDEM.

"The people out start and cast the cart to grounde,
And in the middill of the doneg thei founde
The ded man, that murdererid was al newe,
 Oh blissful God ! thou art so gode and trewe.
Lo ! how thou bewrayist murdre alway !
Murdre wol out, that see we day by day,
Murdre is so walsome † and abominable
To God, that so just is and resoable
That he ne wol it suffre HELED ‡ to be,
Though it abide a yere, or two, or thre,
Murdere wol out, this is my conclusioun ;
 And right anon the ministers o'th toun,
Have hent § the cartir, and so sore him pined ||.
And eke the hostiler ¶ so sore constreyned,
That thei beknew ther wickidnesse anone,
And they were hongid up by the neck bone **.

CHAUCER. The Nonne's Priest's Tale.

* Handle, stick stalk, as the Dutch stele in the same sense ; and a rak handle is as the type of a worthless stick, so of little worth.

† Explained by Mr. Urry, the glossarist to Chaucer, loathsome, hateful, and thus as if grounded in the Dutch walgh, aversion, disgust, and as if it were walghsaeme, and so disgusting ; but, I suspect, this is not the sense of walsome, which I take to be grounded in wald, walt, weld, gewald, geweld, in the import of violence, outrage, atrocity, vehemence, and thus offensive to natural feeling, breaking in upon the order of nature, the nature of things, and as walgsaeme, gewalgsaeme, atrocious, forbidding to the impulse of human nature. To trace wald, gewald, to its true and evident source would turn this note into a treatise upon the nature of primordials and themas, as well as intrude with unhallowed foot upon ground duly consecrated and appropriated by the genius and labour of Bilderdijk.

‡ Concealed.

§ Caught ; already accounted for.

|| Tortured ; as the Dutch pynd, gepynd, from pynen, to torture, to put to the rack, to pain.

¶ Innkeeper ; as the Freench hôtelier in the same sense [of which our ostler is now the travesty and representative] as doing what was formerly done by the present innkeeper ; viz. attending on you in person as soon as you arrived at his gate. The word has nothing to do with horse, as generally supposed, but is grounded in huyzen, to house, to lodge.

 Neck ; see article, He broke his neck.

GOAL, JAIL.

In its direct and usual import of prison or place of confinement, is as the Dutch gheoule, ghioole, geoole, in French gèol, in Spanish jaula, from the Latin caula, a cage, a cell, and is properly as cage, cell, terms still in use among us in the sense of prison, place of confinement.

—“He suffer'd his kinsman March,
Who is, if every owner were right plac'd,
Indeed, his king, to be ENCAO'd in Wales,
There without ransom to lie forfeited.” SHAKSPEARE.

A SHREW.

A malignant [evil-disposed, merciless, inhuman, atrocious, rude, violent, pitiless, rough, vehement, outrageous, cross, cursed] person, a he or she ruffian. Er schier ruuw; q. e. one becoming quickly violent, one at once made to play the part of an atrocious [malignant, pitiless, inhuman, outrageous, ill-disposed, ill tempered] personage; one who shews an evil-disposition upon the slightest occasion, and thus a ruffian, a villain; and, like all nouns, an ellipsis; and here man, woman, or some equivalent term is the subauditum. Schier, at once, now, presently, quickly, Rouw, ruuw, rough, austere, cruel, fierce, atrocious.

—“Thou n'oldest not be felawe in governaunce with decorate, when thou sawe that he had wikid corage of a lycorous shrew and of an accusour.”—CHAUCER. Boeth.

“Certes dignities appertainen properlie to vertue, and vertue transporteth anon to thilke man, to which she herself is conjoyned. And for as moche as honours of people ne maie not make folke digne of honour, it is well sene clereley, that thei ne have no propre beautie of dignitie. And yet menne oughten take more hede in this, that if a wight be in so moche the more outcast, that he is despised of moste folke, so as dignite ne maie not maken SHREWES worthy of no reverence, than maketh dignitie SHREWS rather despised than praised, the which SHREWES dignite sheweth to moche folke. And forsothe not unpunished, that is to sayn, that SHREWES revengen 'hem ayenward upon dignities. For they yelden ayen to dignities as grete guerdons, when they despotten and defoulen dignities with ther vilonies."—CHAUCER. EOD. LOC.

From this shrew, the verb to shrew, to beshrew, to curse, to cross, to wish evil, to imprecate the making bad or the happening of bad to; of which shrewd, in the sense of bad, malicious, cursed, is the past præterite; a word not to be confounded with shrewd in the sense of prompt, observant, quick, ready, for which see following article.

" Ne the forsweringe, ne the fraude coverde and kempt * with a false coloure, ne annoyeth not to SHREWDES †."

ID. EOD.

" Of faire shape I devised her The,
But pale of face sometime was she,
That false traitouresse untrewe,
Was like that salowe horse of hewe,
That in th' Apoclypse is shewed,
That signifieth the folke BESHREWED,
That ben all full of trecherie,
And pale thorough hypocrisie." IDEM. R. R.

" Now doin, els, frere, I BESHREW thy face,
Quoth this Sompnour, and I BESCHREWE me
But if I tellin talis two or thre
Of freris, ere I come to Sittingbourne,
That I shall make thine herte for to mourne." IDEM.

" Her eldest sister is so cursed and SHREWD
That till her father rids his hands of her,
Your love must live like a maid. SHAKSPEARE.

" BESHREW † thee, Cousin, which didst lead me forth
Of that sweet way I was into despair." IDEM.

" Now much BESHREW my manners and my pride,
If Hermia meant to say Lysander lied." IDEM.

————— " Every of this number
That have endured SHREWD § nights and day with us, Shall share the good of our returned fortune." IDEM.

* Combed, adorned, dressed, comptus.

† Bad people, villains.

‡ Be curse, evil befall thee.

§ Bad, cursed, evil

"No enemy is so despicable but he may do a body a shrewd * turn."—L'ESTRANGE.

"Scarce any man passes to a liking of sin in others, but by first practising it himself; and consequently we may take it for a shrewd * indication, and sign, whereby to judge of those who may have sinned with too much caution, to suffer the world to charge sins directly upon their conversation."

SOUTH.

"And who that saith that for to love is vice
Or thraldome, though he fele it in distresse,
He either is envious, or right nice,
Or is unmightie for his shrewdnesse †
To lovin; for soche manir folke I gesse
Diffamin love, as nothing of him knowe,
They speke of love, but nevir bent his bowe."

CHAUCER.

SHREWD.

Discriminating, sagacious, attentive, prompt, ready, always upon the watch in what he says or does, quick of scent, soon perceiving the drift of what is said or done by others; but has no derogatory import, as JOHNSON misleadingly supposes, nor any impliance of undue cunning or slyness. Shrewdness is as quickness of perception, a mind upon its guard in all cases, and nothing more. Schier huede; q. e. almost caution itself, quickly upon the guard, at once guarding [protecting, watching, looking out]; and thus as, watchfulness, sharpness itself; a shrewd person, and a quick [ready, acute, sharp] person are nearly synonymous phrases; we say he keeps a sharp look out, in the sense of he acts with caution, is upon his guard; but shrewd, by false etymologies and analogous sound has been so mixed up in the course of use with the term shrew explained in the preceding article, that the idea of arch [sly, cunning] has entirely, but groundlessly, got possession of the mind whenever we use the term in the good sense of the word. A shrewd guess is, a discriminating [quick, ready, sharp, acute] guess, not a malicious or an arch one, but one which is becoming a cautious, discriminating mind. Schier, at once, quickly, presto, in a moment; and also, almost, all but entirely, and the source of our sheer, as quite, clear, pure. Hoede, huede, is the participle present of hoeden, hueden, to take care of, to be upon the guard, to be cautious of an event, and thus as caution, care, attention, looking out for or against; and schier huede sounds shrewd. JOHNSON brings both shrew and shrewd, in all their meanings, out of schreijen [schreeuwen] to vociferate, to cry, to cry out; but how such root is to bring forth any of the meanings which belong to either word is beyond the depth of my research. HORNE TOOK refers the term to the Anglo Saxon syruan [possibly the Dutch seeren] to hurt, to vex, to molest, to make sore; but does not seem to mend the matter by this, a shrewd guess is neither a sore nor a vexatious guess, on the contrary a useful, and often a healing one.

* Bad, cursed, evil.

† Worthlessness, villainy, badness, cruel disposition.

“ Jacob was a good man, Esau a SCHREWE.”

DIVES ET PAUPERES.

Here shrewe is evidently as a bad one, and neither as vexatious nor sore.

“ Corruption proceeds from employing those who have the character of SHREWD * worldly men, instead of such as have had a liberal education, and trained up in virtue.”

ADDISON.

“ A spiteful saying gratifies so many little passions, that it meets with a good reception; and the man who utters it is looked upon as a SHREWD † satirist.”

“ Her garboiles, which not wanted SHREWDNESS ‡ of policy too, did you too much disquiet.” —SHAKSPEARE.

* Cautious, quick-sighted, ever upon their guard.

† Sharp, quick-sighted, observant.

‡ Quickness, readiness, promptness.

"The neighbours round admire his SHREWDNESS,
For songs of loyalty and lewdness. SWIFT.

SHREWMOUSE.

As the little burrowing field mouse, with habits and eyes similar to the mole, evidently the same word with the Dutch schermuys [in German schermaus] in the same sense. Shre [pronounced habitually shrew] being the metathesis of scher, scherre, the participle present of scherren, scharren, to scrape, to scratch with the claws as a hen or mole does, to rasp; so that shre [shrew] mouse, is the burrowing [scraping, scratching] mouse, which in fact is typical of the animal. Scarren, in Latin scarificare, seems to be grounded here, as well as our term scar [in French escarre] as a scratch; and so does the Dutch scharre, a flat fish [the French carrelet] which has the habit of burrowing in the sand or mud for worms and insects as food. To scar, is to scratch, to mark by scratching. The w seems a mere parergical sound, a redundant expletive. The shrew of this appellative has no connection in source or sense with the terms explained in the two preceding articles; nor is this little harmless animal either venomous in its bite or in any way so mischievous as to be the trope of a shrew, as some of our etymologists have assumed in their lexicographical conundrums.

A BLACKAMOOR.

A negro, an African. Blycke er moor; q. e. the moor betrays himself in the countenance; the Aethiopian bespeaks himself by his face [appearance]; his colour shews what region he belongs to; no one can doubt his being an African from the colour of his skin. Blycke, as the third person present of the potential mood of blycken, to be manifest [clear, evident, plain], to demonstrate, to make ostensible, to publish, to announce; and blycke sounds black. Moor, a negro, a moor, an African, in Latin maurus, in Italian and Spanish moro. JOHNSON says the term is as black and moor! A black man is a sound phrase, but a black moor is pleonastic and as if we were to say a white Englishman, or a white European.

TO INVEIGLE.

To ensnare, to entrap, to involve, to entangle, to perplex, to seduce from the right path, or way, into one of difficulty and embarrassment, to lull or deceive into a sense of security. Inwiggelen [in-wickelen, inwikkelen]; q. e. to involve, to entangle, to embarrass, to perplex; but in the implied import of to do so by undue or deceitful means; and grounded in either wicken, to oscillate, to vibrate, to stir backwards and forwards; or else in wiegen, wieghen, to rock, and thus to lull; or if in the sense of to rock, as to shake with violence, and so to confound, to bewilder, to amaze [to stupify] the mind. JOHNSON, after SKINNER, MINSHEW, and JUNIUS, offers both the French aveugler, to blind, and the Italian invogliare, to give a desire or inclination, for the source of the word, seemingly as leaving us to take which we like best; but besides the difficulty of turning either of the words into the form of inveigle, the import is not so strong as in avengler, and with a stronger sense of delusion or deception than in the last; for to induce a desire is not necessarily to illude or deceive and so to inveigle.

“ Have they invented tones to win
The women, and make them draw in
The men, as Indians with a female Tame Elephant INVEIGLE the male.” HUDIBRAS.

“ Achilles has INVEIGLED his fool from him.” SHAKESPEARE.

“ Yet have they many baits and guileful spells
To INVEIGLE, and invite the unwary sense
Of them that pass unweeting by the way.” MILTON.

"I leave the use of garlick to such as are INVEIGLED into the gout by the use of too much drinking."—TEMPLE.

"Leaning her head against my breast,
My panting heart rock'd her asleep." SHAKSPEARE.

—————“Sleep rock thy brain,
And never come mischance between us twain.” SHAKSPEARE.

—————“The ROCKING town,
Supplants their footsteps, to and fro they reel
Astonish'd.” PHILIPS,

TO PLAY AT LEAP FROG.

To spring as far as you can over a range of backs made by a part of those who are engaged in the diversion for that purpose. Toe pleé, luy, 'p, verhoog!; q. e. to your business, you lazy one, up, spring high! come, it is your turn now, you idle one, up, take a lofty jump! and thus as a call from a playfellow upon the other's activity and an order for him to leap as high and as far as he can; which is the aim of the diversion among schoolboys. Pleé, pleghe, duty, business, duty, what is to be done. Luy, ley, lazy, inactive; luy'p, luy op, up lazy one, sounds lep as leap is usually pronounced. Verhoogen, to raise high, to elevate, to mount on high, to exalt; of which verhoog is the imperative, and sounds nearly as we pronounce frog. JOHNSON fancies the game is so termed from the jump of those who play the game, resembling that of the frog. I own it never struck me so, though I have often seen it played; and I suspect that it is the travestied form of words which has suggested this thought to the Doctor.

“Twas he made emperors gallant,
To their own sisters and their aunts;
Set popes and cardinals agog,
To play with pages at LEAP FROG.” HUDIBRAS.

“If I could win a lady at LEAP FROG I should quickly leap into a wife.”—SHAKSPEARE.

TO WHEEDLE.

To coax, to cajole, to gull, to employ such means of misleading as you would only make use of in regard to a weak-headed silly person, to gain or seduce to your purposes one whose capacity you are entitled to estimate at a very low rate. Toe wije ijdel; q. e. as to an empty headed person, as to a vain [empty, addle-headed] person; the term to treat, to use, to speak, or some such equivalent being implied, or perhaps having been originally a part of the context with which the expression was used. So that the travestied form has the amount of to treat the person in question as a fool, and so to make a fool of him, which is the true import of to wheedle, the sound of which is carried by the phrase toe wije ijdel; and, by the falling of the infinitive preposition to into the travesty, the phrase has been converted into a verb, as in numerous other instances of words of like origin in the present form of our language. Toe, to. Wie, as if, like, as. Ijdel, vain, empty, vacant. JOHNSON, in regard to the term, which forms the subject of this article, says; “of the word I can find no etymology, though used by good writers.” LOCKE seems to mention it as a cant word, and says, HE THAT FIRST BROUGHT THE WORD sham, or wheedle, IN USE, PUT TOGETHER, AS HE THOUGHT FIT, IDEAS HE MADE IT STAND FOR. SHAM and WHEEDLE, like all other words which belong to the ordinary language of our kind, are the produce of our sensations acting upon our mind, announced by the subordinate organs designed for the purpose of speech by the creator of us. Sham has been accounted for in VOL. I. page 164 of this essay, and wheedle in the present article; and neither word is an exception to the nature of language, as LOCKE’s observation would seem to imply.

“ Johnny WHEEDL’D, threatn’d, fawn’d,
Till Phillis all her trinkets pawn’d.” SWIFT.

“ His bus’ness was to pump and WHEEDLE,
And men with their own keys unriddle,
To make them to themselves give answers,
For which they pay the necromancers.” HUDIBRAS.

“ His sire,
From Mars his forge sent to Minerva’s schools,
To learn the unlucky art of WHEEDLING foote.” DRYDEN.

TO FETCH.

In all its well known meanings; is grounded in the thema fa, fa-en, of which the præterite feick [I took, I received, I obtained] is still to be met with; in the Gothick fahan, of which the Anglo-Saxon makes fengan, and the Dutch vangen, the præterite of which fahan is fon and the present ic fæh. From this word the Germans have their fahig, [fæhig, that is faig] in the import of capable, as that which receives, obtains, takes in, holds, contains, the Friezlander his old fana, we our to fetch, and the Dutch their vatten [to lay hold of, to receive in, to catch, to contain]. And from a secondary sense of this fa-en, viz. to undertake, to take upon, comes vader [father] as the one who undertakes or takes upon himself the charge or care of the offspring, and also gevader, godfather, compere, cofather or fellowfather; as well as voede [food] as that which is taken for nourishment. So that to fetch is in the ground import of to lay hold of, to take, to obtain, and what can be fetched without so doing or being so done to. CHAUCER has fette, for FETCHED. Vaden in Dutch is to take care of, to attend to, to maintain, and voeden [to feed] is formed regularly from voede [food] the præterite of vaden. Vader exists in Gothick only in the aggregate sense of fadrein [parents]; in Anglo-Saxon as fæder, in Icelandick as fader, in Latin as pater, in Greek as πατης; always as the one who charges himself with the maintenance of the offspring. Voedster, whence our foster, belongs here also; as do numerous other terms in all the northern dialects. Vaden, to take care of, to bring up, to maintain, becomes in Anglo-Saxon fadian, in the same sense, in Gothick fodan [to feed], in Anglo-Saxon foeden, fedan, and in English to feed. Hence also our fodder, provender, in Icelandick foodr.

“ And shortly forth this tale for to trace,
 I say that to this new-made Marquesesse,
 God hath ysent soche favour of his grace,
 That it ne semid by no likeliness,
 That she y borne was and ~~fed~~ * in rudenesse
 As in a cote or in an ox’is stalle,
 But norished as in an emperour’s halle.”

CHAUCER.

In the course of use and time to fetch, along with the ground sense of to take hold of, to hold, has been extended to reach or bring that which is taken hold of or held; fetch my hat, is, bring me or reach to me my hat, as that which you have first taken hold of. To fetch a sigh, is to bring out a sigh. A fetch, as a deception, is a take in. To fetch up your dinner, and to reach up your dinner, are equivalent expressions, and mean to bring out your dinner from the stomach which held it. To fetch a man a blow, is to reach a man a blow, cause him to take or receive it; and in fact to reach is necessarily implied in the act of taking hold of or holding, so that this direction of the sense springs from the ground import of the verb to fetch, as above explained. To fetch breath, is to take breath, and in the true sense of to fetch.

“ In smells we see their great and sudden effect in FETCHING † men again when they swoon.”—BACON.

* Here ~~fed~~ is in its original import of maintained, taken care of, kept, educated, and not simply supplied with food, for which alone it is now used.

† In taking or bringing back to their former state.

"The condition of weapons, and their improvements, are the FETCHING a far off, for that out runs, as it is seen in ordnance and muskets."—BACON.

"I'll FETCH † a turn about the garden, pitying
The pangs of barr'd affections; though the king
Has charg'd you should not speak together."

SHAKSPEARE.

— — — — — "Note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts
FETCHING ‡ mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud."

IBID.

"Mean time flew our ships and straight we FETCH'D §
The syren's isle." CHAPMAN.

To fetch a price, is to reach a price, to reach the price or amount.

HORNE TOOKE makes FETCH the past tense and past participle of feccan, to acquire by fraud, to induce, to bring to, fraude acquirere, adducere, and says it is as the Anglo Saxon fæc; but that is not the sense of to fetch. Fetch my hat, is not induce [prevail on by art] my hat to come to me, but lay hold of it and reach or bring it to me.

A BLUNDERBUS.

As the well known fire arm used for protection of person and property. Er bij lont tier-busse; q. e. here, by the match a roaring barrel [tube, gun]; by being ignited the barrel thunders [makes a loud noise]; and thus a term analogous to that of the Dutch for the same arm; viz. donderbusse; q. e. thunder pipe, thundering barrel, roaring tube. Lont, lint, match. Tiere as the participle present of tieren, to roar, to make a loud noise. Bus, busse, buis, bos [a tube, a pipe, a barrel, and also a gun] the ellipsis of schiet-busse, a fire arm, a musket; and in fact whatever contains, encloses, or holds; as grounded in the thema bo-en, to bound, to confine, to envelope, to enclose; also to house, to cover, to shelter, to receive within; and in this second sense buis is synonymous with huis, huys, house. The Dutch say peperhuisje where we say pepper-box. A citizen's box in the country, is a citizen's house in the country, his villa. Hence also our term box and the Latin buxus [boxtree], as the wood of which pipes, flutes, and such like musical instruments are made; as well as our terms bower, to bound [formerly to boun, to bowne], and many other words. The French arquebuse, in the sense of a fire arm or musket, meant originally the tube or pipe belonging to a bow, anciently used by some of the western nations, where a tube was fixed, through which the arrow was carried, as the ball now is, through the barrel of the gun; and which kind of tube, after the invention of gunpowder, was applied as a pipe or barrel to the gun-stock. So that arquebuse means simply a bow or bent stock with this kind of pipe suited to pass the arrow by. The French trebuchet, as a trap, is the Dutch trekbus, a spring-gun, trap-gun; and their bouche a feu, in the sense of a fire-arm, a piece of ordnance, is the metonymy of the Dutch vuurbusse [in German feuerbuchse] a fire-pipe, a fire-arm. The expression bouche a feu, in its literal form is sheer nonsense. The French term haquebuse, in the sense of a fire-arm or musket, is the Dutch haeckbusse in the same import, and means the barrel or pipe with a hooked or crooked stock, such as the old musket or matchlock had. Haecke, haak, a hook, a crooked handle.

* Taking effect, taking hold of, reaching.

† Take. ‡ Taking.

§ Reached.

“ And yet againewarde skrikid every nonne,
 The pang of love so strainid them to crie;
 Now wo the time (quoth they) that we be BOUN, &c.
 CHAUCER.

* Bound.

“ For soth, sir, and for your love, a thousand in this town
 Wold do hym worship, and be right feyne and bown*
 To plete hym, and avail to have thank of you.”

CHAUCER.

TO GAMBLE.

To game or play unfairly, to use underhand means to obtain advantage of another in any mutual transaction between parties, but, by use, generally applied in relation to the gaming table : avoir l' art de corriger la fortune, to play the best of the game. Toe geheim bij el; q. e. all close in regard to the other, completely shut up as respects the other ; and implying the keeping secret either the superiority in play, or the foul manœuvres, the one knows how to use in the game, or transaction, which is to take place between the one and the other party. But in fact without any grounded reference to the kind of transaction except such as may be inferred from the context ; we say, to gamble in the funds ; to gamble at cards ; to gamble in railway transactions, &c. &c. ; and failure makes no difference, for the intention was to take an unfair advantage. Disappointment no more makes it an innocent contrivance in the gambler, than being detected and hung for contriving a forgery, or a robbery of any other sort. A gamester may be an honest man though not a cunning one ; a gambler may be a cunning man, but cannot be an honest one. Toe geheim, shut up in secret, quite close, all to himself ; and sounds to gam. Bij el, in regard to another, with another, and sounds bel, ble. The original phrase resounding into the form of a verb in the travesty, has been adopted in use as such. JOHNSON, whose sagacity was probably never exceeded by that of any man, though he had not the clue to lead him to the ground distinction between GAMESTER and GAMBLER, and fancied for want of this clue, that gambler was a cant term for gamester, yet by his definitions of the two, showed he felt the sound distinction between them. GAMESTER, he says, is one who is viciously addicted to play, that is, so fond of play that it is to a fault in him; but GAMBLER, he says, is a knave whose practice it is to invite the unwary to game and cheat them; how could he then, with the feeling of so wide a difference, imagine the two were a same word, or grounded in one which had the same meaning? A man may be vitiously addicted to drinking, but that don't make him a sharper or knave. A man may be addicted to racing or attending Newmarket, but he is not for that merely showed either a black-leg or sharper; and the difference between the two is nearly analogous to that between the gamester and the gambler. Among the lovers of racing we may count the honestest man in the country, but not one among the black-legs or those who have a secret understanding with them or through them. To game, has been explained above.

* Bound.

A BLACK LEG.

One who makes his trade the overreaching of those who are less adroit or knowing than himself in the transactions in question; a sharper; un chevalier d' industrie; one who lives by his wits; a term now principally used in regard to such as attend races and resorts of gaming, in the view of the vocation above explained. Er blycke legge; q. e. there waylaying [laying in wait, being upon the lay] is manifest; there scheme [contrivance, design] is clearly to be descried; there the being upon the watch to entrap is self-evident; there, the being upon the lay is as clear as day-light; implying, to all but the unwary dupes, or at least not perceived by them till they have fallen into the snare, and become the victims, and thus too late for themselves. Legghe, legge, the participle present of legghen, leggen, to lay, to place, to put, to set; jemand laagen [laeghen], leggen is, to lay a snare for a person, to take him in; jets weg leggen, to lay away, put a thing out of sight; te laste leggen, to accuse, to lay to the account of; nieuwe lasten leggen, to lay on new taxes, and thus to set fresh traps for fresh prey, to play the sharper, to impose upon, implying also the laying, as done by those who have nothing in common with the public, and who are as it were, the black-legs of the community. Blycken, to appear, to be evident, and here as the third person of the potential mood; hence blyk, proof, evidence, which sounds as we utter black; and however different in letter the two words may appear, they are in fact grounded on the same primordial syllable, as will be explained in another article.

A SHARPER.

One always ready to seize any undue advantage of another; one who lives by doing mischief to [damaging] others [all those he can]; thus a pest to society; a common nuisance; a general curse. Er schde bij 'r; q. e. there [here] mischief is close by; here misfortune [damage, detriment, injury] is at hand, ever ready to fall in [to take place]; and what else is a sharper? Schaē, schade, schaede, schaade, as the participle present of schaeden, schaaden, to injure, to damage, to do mischief to, to inconvenience, to annoy, and by the lengthened sound infused by the double and broadly pronounced a, schaād sounds as we utter schar. Bij 'r bij er, by there, hard by; and if we, as the Welsh naturally do, pronounce b as p, by er comes out per.

“SHARPERS, as pikes, prey upon their own kind.”
L'ESTRANGE.

“ He should retrench what he lost to SHARPERS, and “ Spent upon puppet-plays, and apply it to that use.”

ARBUTHNOT.

A DOG-TRICK.

A bad turn, a mischievous disappointment, a sore deceit, unexpected mischance, a blasting of a previously entertained hope by deceit, an expectation blighted by some treacherous or fraudulent means. Er doghe dreighe; q. e. in this case fraud prevails; this is a case where deception is the master; here cheating succeeds, prospers, prevails, avails. Doghen, deughen, to prevail, to be availing, to have the upper hand, to succeed; here used in the potential mood, and in the third person present. Drieghe, the participle present of drieghen, bedreighen, [in German, tregen, trugen, betrugen] to impose upon, to deceive, to defraud, whence our treachery, formerly treget, tregette and tregetry, as well as the French tricher and tricherie and our own trickery; t and d are convertible sounds, and so are gh and ck; sterlinck and sterling are the same word, and so are dood and tod. So that drieghe sounds tricke. Hence trechour, as a treacherous person. But traitor is as the French traître, in Spanish traidor, the contraction of the Italian traditore, the Latin traditor. And thus a dog-trick is a deceptious disappointment of something looked to. And in this instance an exoneration of the faithful attendant upon man, from being held for a trope of deceit and vileness, as JOHNSON infers, and as Dr. GREY, in his notes upon Hudibras, pronounces him, ex cathedrā, to be; instancing dog-rose, dog-latin, dog-trick, dog-cheap, dog-bolt, &c.; as proof.

Trick, in the import of habit, custom, a bad habit, a vicious custom, is as the Dutch tick [trick] in the sense of a touch, a mark, a dot, a sign, a trait, a line, a score; hence tekeen, tekeyn, a token, a sign ; and also the French tic, a habit, a peculiar manner, a bad custom ; as well as the Dutch treck, treke, a line, a lineament, a mark, a trait, a trick or habit : and by extension of sense in the course of use, a drawing on, and also a longing for, a desire, an attraction, as drawing towards the fixed point of the affections. Tick, as the ellipsis of tick-louse, in Dutch teke, is probably as the insect which makes and leaves a mark or sign where he has stuck and drawn blood. To tick, in the sense of to score up or run in debt, is probably as to mark up, to notch or score the debt instead of paying it ; hence the sense of trick at a game of cards ; and the origin of a meaning analogous to that of a SCORE, which is a mark or token. Trick, in the first sense, as above explained, and trick in the second, as now explained, have fallen into the same form of letter simply from the analogy of sound of their two original forms, as is so frequently the case in all languages, but especially in ours, from peculiar circumstances, the most masquerading of any. In the phrase tic douloureux, as the cruel complaint so termed, I suspect, tic to be as the point, spot, place, where the pain seems centred, and thus as the fixed spot or point of pain ; which in fact is the essential mark or character of that disease, and its peculiar pathological distinction.

“ For I did hem a TREGETTRY *.” CHAUCER. Rom. of the Rose.

“ Through simplesse of the Prelacie,
They know not all my TREGETTRY.” IBID.

“ Go herbir † ye els where than here
That han a lier called me.
TWO TREGETOURS‡ ar’t thou and he
That in mine hous do me this shame,
And for my sothesawe ye me blame,
Is this the sermon that ye make ?” IBID.

* Treachery, deceit, fraud ; and we here find the g of the original driegerij, bedriegerij.

† Lodge, house. ‡ Traitors.

“ Whoso ytoke a wethir’s skinne,
 And wrappid a gredy woulfe therinne,
 For he should go with lambis white,
 Wenist* thou not he would ‘hem bite ?
 Yes : Netherlesse, as he was wode†,
 He would ‘hem wirry, and drinke the blode,
 And wel the rathir ‘hem disceve,
 For sither thei coude not perceive
 His TREGETTE‡, and his cruitte,
 Thei would him folow, the he fie.”

CHAUCER.

“ Through me hath many one deth receved,
 That my TREGET§ ner aperceved,
 And yet receveth, and shal receive,
 That my falseness shall nere perceive.”

IBID.

“ But I that were || my simple clothe
 Robbe bothe the robbid and the robbours,
 And gile the giled and gilours,
 By my TREGET¶ I gathre and threste
 The grete tresour into my cheste,
 That lieth with me so faste ybound.”

IBID.

“ For soth I am a false traitour
 God judged me for a thefe TRECHOUR,
 Forsworne I am, but wel nigh none
 Wote of my gile, til it be done.”

IBID.

“ Of all this worlde is emperour Gile my fathir, the false TRECHOUR.”

IBID.

“ For I am sikir there sciences
 By whiche men make divers aparences,
 Soche as these stoll TREATORIS  pliae,
 For oft at festis have I wel herd saie
 That TRAGOTORIS , within a halle large,
 Have made to come in watir and a barge,
 And in the halle rowin up and doun,
 Sometime hath semid come a grim lioun,
 And sometime flouris spring as in a mede,
 Sometime a vine, and grapis, white and rede,
 Sometime a castill alle of lime and stone,
 And when ‘hem likid, voidin ‘hem anon,
 Thus semid it to every mann’ is sight.”

IDEM. The Fr. Tale.

* Thinkest. † Mad, raving. ‡ Fraud.

§ Deceit. || Wear. ¶ Traitor, deceiver.

 Impostors, conjurors, driegers, bedriegeſy, with a latinized substantive termination.

" For though dame Fortune seem to smile
 And leer upon him for a while,
 Sh'ill after show him, in the nick
 Of all his glorie, a DOG-TRICK."

HUDIBRAS.

" Sir Thomas Moor said, that a TRICK of law had no less power than the wheel of fortune to lift men up or to cast them down."—RALEIGH.

" Suspicion shall be stuck full of eyes,
 For treason is but trusted like a fox
 Who ne'er so tame, so cherish'd, and so lock'd up,
 Will have a vile TRICK of his ancestors."

SHAKSPERE.

" So fellest foes who broke their sleep,
 To take the one the other, by some chance,
 Some TRICK not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends."

IBID.

" Altho' the print be little, the whole matter
 And copy of the father; eye, nose, lip,
 The TRICK of 's frown, his forehead."

IBID.

DOG-BOLT.

Inconstant, fickle, changing, revolving, never fixed. Die hoog bolt; q. e. that which turns round mightily, that which is ever going round, that which is consummately revolving [unstable, fickle, changing place]; that which is everlastingly turning about, and so a due epithet for Fortune, as the presiding goddess of the ever revolving wheel of chance, and thus the type of fickleness. Bolt, as the third person present of bollen, to turn round, to revolve, whence our to bowl, and the Spanish bolver, [to roll round] as well as the Latin volvere, and the Italian volgere, a series in which the interchanging b and v is sufficiently instanced. Die, which, that which. Hoog, hoogh, highly, mightily, very, extremely. The term dog-bolt, seems to have been dismally blundered by our etymologists, and its true sense studiously lost sight of by all of them. DR. GREY says, the term may be taken from the situation of a rabbit, or other animal, that is found from its hole by a dog, and then said to bolt. Unless it ought to have been written dolg-bote, which in the Anglo-Saxon law signifies a recompence for a hurt or injury !! JOHNSON surmises its source to be in the fact of meal or flour being sifted or bolted to a certain degree of fineness, and then the coarser remnant given to the dogs !!

Fired with dispute, and speaking Latin,
As well as basting, and bear-baiting,
And desperate of any course,
To free himself by wit or force,
His only solace was, that now
His ~~DOG-BOLT~~ fortune was so low,
That either it must quickly end,
Or turn about again, and mend :
In which he found th' event, no less
Than other times, beside his guess.—HUDIBRAS.

DOG-LATIN.

Unclassick latin, modern latin, second-hand latin, school latin. Die hooge latijn; q. e. this is university latin, latin learnt at school or college, and thus unclassick or modern latin; latin not from the fountain head, not of the time when it was the living language of the nation to which it belonged. Hooge as the ellipsis of hooge-school, hooghe-schole, high-school, university, lyceum, college.

DOG-EARED.

As when we say, that book is dog-eared, and in the sense of it's leaves or pages being marked with traces of folding or turning down, either across or at the corners; creased. Die hoog eerd; q. e. this [is] very much furrowed; deeply creased, very much marked with furrow-like lines. Hoog, hoogh, in the sense of deep, highly. Eerd, geerd, eeried, geeried, the participle past of eeren, aeren, eren, erien, to plough, to furrow; formerly in use in the same sense with us under the forms of to ear, and to erie, and, as already stated, the same word with the Latin arare. We say his forehead is furrowed with wrinkles, and mean indented or marked with wrinkles. SUCKLING, the poet, has stretched the trope still further and written, “no briny tear has furrow’d her smooth cheek.” Vultus aratus erit rugis. Die hoog eerd, sounds dog-eared, according to the former pronunciation of to ear, to erie with us.

A CREASE.

As the mark made by doubling or folding; the line made by a plait or fold. Er keere rije's; q. e. there turning is making a line; turning down in this case is marking a strait line. Keere, as the participle present of keeren to turn in or down, and thus a turning in, or down, or up. Rije as the participle present of rijen, rijghen, to rule, to make a line. SKINNER derives the verb from the Latin creta, chalk, and JOHNSON adopts the groundless fancy, thinking, perhaps, of the milk-woman's chalk score at his door. But a crease is not a chalked line or mark, nor made upon a wooden tally. Keere rije's, the double i, sounding as ee, resolves in utterance into crease as pronounced by us. Hence the verb to crease.

“Men of great parts are unfortunate in business, because they go out of the common road: Ponce desired Lord Bolingbroke to observe, that the Clerks used an Ivory Knife, with a blunt edge, to divide paper, which cut it even, only requiring a strong hand; whereas a sharp penknife would go out of the crease and disfigure the paper.”—SWIFT.

A DOG-ROSE.

As the briar or bramble which produces the scarlet or bright red fruit so conspicuous in the coppice and hedge during the autumn and in the begining of the winter. Er die hoog roo's; q. e. there is that which is of a very high coloured red; there you see what is a bright red; and, I suspect, the term had originally no special reference to the wild rose, but referred to red berries in general, and that the analogy of sound has been the only cause of its having become by the travesty as the rose of the hedge; the flower of which is evidently not a deep red [scarlet.]

DOG-CHEAP.

Fully worth the price demanded; ought to be bought from being quite equal to the value put upon it by the seller; worth any body's money from its internal value compared with the price set upon it, a good purchase from its intrinsic excellence. Doghe schie 'p; q. e. worth soon finds its price, intrinsic value soon finds a market; when a thing is essentially good there is no haggling about its sale; intrinsic value never misses a purchaser. Misled by the form of the travesty, JOHNSON defines the phrase to be, cheap as dog's meat or the offal bought for dogs; but dog's meat may be comparatively dear for what it is, and then a bad bargain to buy. Besides, the phrase may be applied to a purchase paid by millions of money, if bestowed for genuine worth; and is a trope fetched out of the dog's meat wheelbarrow a suitable type for such a transaction? Or would the literal form of dog-cheap express such meaning in regard to any bargain? What can dog as the animal have to do here? The true type of little worth is dirt, the metathesis of the Dutch drijt, turd, as that which is exhausted of all its goodness by digestion, and thus the valueless refuse of substance. Doghe, the participle present of doghen, deughen, to be worth, and thus a being worth, as worth itself. Schie, schielick, at once, immediately, quickly. Op, 'p, up, as when we say the market is up, in the sense of finished over, gone [taken away]; or as when the Dutch say de brood is op, the bread is all gone, de wyn is op, the wine is all gone [out, finished]. CHEAP, in its unsophisticated or direct import, is simply a taking, a buying, and thus impliedly a thing worth having in return for equal worth [a bargain]; for to suppose more should be given than equal worth is out of the logick or common sense upon which all language for rational beings is founded. Cheap, and the Anglo-Saxon ceap, and the Dutch kaap and koop, as well as the German kauf are the same word in the ground; kaap being as acquisition, taking, acquirement, booty, capture, and koop and kauf as bargain, acquirement by barter or purchase, and thus in a more definite sense of acquirement. From kaap, as booty, is formed kopen, to capture, to make a prize of, to acquire, and from koop, as acquirement by social compact or rule, koopen, to buy, to acquire, and our to cheapen, in the same sense; and from kauf, the German kauffen, to buy, to chaffer. Kaupen, kopen, and koopen, are a same word in the same way as the Dutch nemen, to take away, and the Latin emere [anciently nemere] to buy, are. From kopen, comes the Latin capere in the same sense. From nemen we have our antiquated to nim and to name [to take, to hold], words which we find continually occurring in CHAUCER; in the præterite form, nom, nome, nomen, nomin, nommen [took, taken]. Hence the Latin nomen and our name, as the mean by which a man is taken or held by. Ter kaap varen, is to go a prize-making [a privateering].

“ And evir all the housis angles
Is full of rownings and of jangles,

* * * *

Of trust, of drede, of jalously,
Of witte, of winning, of folly,
Of plenty, and of grete famine,
Of CHEPE, of derthe, and of ruine;

* Barter, exchange, and thus as means of buying or obtaining what one wanted in exchange for what the other wanted, and that is plenty, sufficiency, abundance, in the true sense.

Of gode or of misgovernement,
Of fyre and divers accidents."

CHAUCER.

"Thou saist some folk desire us for richesse,
Some for our shape, and some for our fairenesse,
And some for she can either sing or daunce,
Some for gentilness, some for dalaunce,
Some for their hondis and their armis smale;
Thus goth all to the devil by the tale.
Thou saist men may not kepe a castil wall,
It may so long asailid ben ovre all.
And if that she be foule, thou saist that she Covitith every man that she may se;
For as a spaniel she wold on him lepe
Till that she find some man that woll her CHEPE*."

IDEM.

"In Surrey + whilom dwelt a company
Of CHAPMEN + rich, and thereto sad and true,
That wide were sentin their spicerie,
Clothis of gold, and sattin rich of hew,
Their CHAFARE § was so thrifte, and so new,
That every wight has dainty to CHAFARE ||
With them, and eke to sellin them their were."

IDEM.

"That one side is, that I of tell,
Popis, cardinals, and prelates,
Parsons, monkis, and freris fell,
Priors, abbotes, of grete estates,
Of hevin and hell thei kepe the yeates,
And Peter's successors ben all,
And this is demid by old dates,
And falshed foule mote it befall.
* * * * *

With pride punishith thei the pore,
And some one thei sustain with sale;
Of holie churche makith a hore
And fill ther wombe with wine and ale;
With money fill thei many a male ¶
And CHAFFRIN churchis when thei fall
And telle the peple a leude tale,
Soche false faitours foul 'hem befall."

IDEM.

* Take her, have her, make a bargain of her.

† Syria.

‡ Barterers, bargainers, traders.

§ Chaffering, bargaining, selling, trading.

|| To chaffer, to bargain.

¶ Coffer, chest.

"By that it nighed to harvest new corne came to CHEPING *."—VIS. PEER. PLOWM.

HORNE TOOKE refers cheap to the Anglo Saxon cypan, mercari; but what and whence is cypan? for that 's no more the source of cheap than cheap of that; such an etymology is worse than tit for tat, for it is not merely nothing, but a misleading into the bargain.

A CHOP.

In the sense of a change, an exchange, a turn and return, a barter of worth for worth; also a change, a sudden turn. Er schie op; q. e. a case suddenly over, quickly over, soon ended, soon concluded, soon done with, and such is an exchange or the making of an exchange or barter. Schie, quickly. Op, oppe, over, done with, and as with as when we say all is over, in the sense of all is at an end [concluded, finished]; and schie op, sounds chop. Hence we have made our verb to chop in the sense of to exchange, to barter; as well as of, to change suddenly, to be over quickly, to take a sudden turn; the wind has chopped about, is as the wind has changed suddenly about, turned quickly from the quarter whence it had been blowing, ended from coming at the point it before came from, over in that quarter; to chop logick, is to change [to run] from one word to another, from one subject of argument to another, as people do when they are disputing for disputing sake or for victory, and implies a quick exchange or bandying to and fro of mere words. HORNE TOOKE fetches the verb out of the Anglo Saxon cypan, to negotiate, to traffic, to trade, to buy and sell; but to chop, is to exchange at once, upon the spot, and implies a sudden conclusion, a quick settling of the business; and how will this derivation account for the expressions, the wind has chopped about; they are chopping logick? To chop, in the unadulterated and direct import of to cut, to cleave, to hack, is as the French couper, and the Dutch kappen, in the same sense, as will be explained in another article.

* To market, to sale, to exchange, to barter.

“I am a Hebrew borne by byrth
And stolne away was I,
And chopt and changde as bondslaves bee,
This wretched life to trye.”

GENESIS. CHAP. XI. VOL. 100. P. E.

“The CHOPPING of bargains, when a man buys, not to hold, but to sell again, grindeth upon the seller and the buyer.”—BACON.

“Sets up communities and senses
To CHOP and change intelligences. HUDIBRAS.

“We go CHOPPING and changing our friends, as well as our horses.”—L’ESTRANGE.

“Let not the council at the bar CHOP with the judge, nor wind himself into the handling of the cause anew, after the judge has declared his sentence.”—BACON.

“You ’ill never leave off your CHOPPING logick, till your skin is turned over your ears for prating.”—L’ESTRANGE.

The chops, as that part which opens first, as in the chops of the face or head, the chops of a river, the chops of the channel, the chops of a smith’s vice, &c., I take to be as schie op’s; q. e. that which opens first, that which is opened first, that which opens at once; and such is the import in all the above phrases; the chops of the channel, is its first opening or entrance. JOHNSON gives no etymology for either this word or to chop in the above sense. Schie op, as before explained. ’S, is, is.

“He went his waie, and with the copir came,
And his Chanon in his hondis it NAME [took, held],
And of that copir waied out but an ounce.” CHAUCER.

OBS. We say, he named a day to do it, in the sense of he fixed a day to do it. Chopped lips or hands, is as opened [cracked, cut] lips or hands, lips or hands full of openings or cracks.

FICKLE.

Waivering, unsteady, variable, inconstant, uncertain, not to be trusted to. Wickele; q. e. vacillating, wavering, staggering, tottering, changeable; as the participle present of wickelen, wigghelen, to totter, to shake, to rock, to vacillate, to be unsteady; and is not a fickle being, an unsteady being, one not to be depended upon, because such? The w, v, and f, represent convertible aspirates, the Dutch wrevel, vrevel, frevel, and the French frivole, and the Latin frivolus, as well as our frivolous are one word.

HE WAS PUSHED TO THE WALL.

He was reduced to the extremity of taking a resolve in regard to the case in question; he was driven to the last extremity, nothing but decision [resolution] could save him in the impending difficulty. Hie was bij husscht toe; dije waele; q. e. what has taken place has excited [stirred him up] to the utmost pitch [has irritated him to the last extremity]; the choice [determination] is now all that can be of use [a resolution one way or the other is the only resource]; by this an utmost provocation has been given; the choice whether it is to be put up with or revenged and punished is the only recourse to be had [whether the evil is to be resisted or submitted to is the only stay left]. Hie, here. Bij, by, from. Husschen, hussen, hisschen, hitschen, hitsen, to enrage, to instigate, to stir up, to provoke, to excite; of which husschen is the participle past. Dije, see ensuing article. Sound b as p and bij husscht becomes pushed.

Waele [in German wahl], choice, election. In its literal form the phrase is an absurdity.

HE TOOK THE WALL.

He took the best place, he took the advantage ground, he got the better of the other in question; but always inferring a degree of unfairness in the instance alluded to. Hie tuck dije waele; q. e. here cunning profits of the choice offered; here contrivance makes use of the occasion which presents itself, here artifice improves the opportunity arisen, and from the term tuck [in the import of machination, fraud, deception, cunning], the phrase implies a degree of unfairness in the getting the advantage on the occasion in question. In the travesty, the phrase is popularly used respecting the giving the wall or house side of the street to another as a mark of consideration either in respect to sex, age, or station; and the other tenses have been suggested from the word tuck travestyng into took as the praterite of to take; an occurrence which has established tenses, in a like way, in many other of our adulteratedly adopted phrases, now from the loss of the original forms used among us as original. Except as the representative of some former sound sense, what meaning can be attached to the words, to take the wall, or he took the wall, even if we add from him, or of him, and supply, by supposition the word side to wall? What is the advantage of going next the wall, if there should be one, beyond that of going on the side where there is none? What etiquette, what ceremonial, has ever established its precedence or preference, except that which has been forced into our fancies by the travesty alone? Who beyond our fancies, has been the master of the ceremonies to settle this conundrum for superiority and deference? Dije, the third person present of the potential mood of dijen, dijgen, to be of use to, to serve, to cause to prosper [thrive, increase, grow greater] and was formerly in use among us in the shape of to the and in the same sense; so mote I the, was a sort of adjuration, and meant as, I hope to thrive [to live, to go on and prosper]; by CHAUCER the term is often used; ill mote he the, evil may he go on, badly may he succeed, was also a phrase in use a century or two ago. Waele, choice, was also in use with us under the form of waile, in the same sense; wailed wine, was choice [select] wine.

"This lepir * loge take for thy godeley boure †.
And for thy bed take now a bounche of stro ‡.
For wailid wine and metes thou had tho,
Take moulid bred, pirate §, and sidir || soure."

CHAUCER.

WICKED.

In the usual meaning of that epithet. Wijckt; q. e. yielded, abandoned, given up, turned from, departed from, as the participle past [wijckt, gewijckt] of wijken, wijken, to yield, to give up, to fall back, to give away, to desert; and the having given away, is an expression always used in a pejorative sense, as having yielded unduly, abandoned, deserted; we can say, he has given way [yielded] to vice, but not to virtue. A wicked person is thus a person who has yielded unfitly throughout his general course of action, or in regard to some portion of it, one who has yielded to temptation, one who has not shewn a fit degree of resistance to temptation [evil solicitation]; and temptation, is also always used in a bad sense; we call the devil per euphrasin, the tempter; and we pray not to be led into temptation, and impliedly that we may be able to keep from being wicked [yielded up to it]. So that groundedly wicked is as yielded [abandoned] to that which is bad; and by extension in use, applied to any thing in which the natural goodness of its kind is lost [abandoned, parted with] given up, and so wanting, to any thing without goodness or value. The phrase a wicked dog, in the sense of a profligate man, one given up to vice, is the travesty; er wijckt doghe; q. e. virtue [worth] has departed [given away] in him; goodness [value] has no longer any footing there; and thus one abandoned by all that is good [valuable]; and amounting to the sense of wickid is werthe, as used by CHAUCER in the following stanza.

* Hospital for lepers, room in a public refuge for lepers.
† Chamber. ‡ Straw. § Perry. || Cider.

“O ! soppe of sorowe sonkin into care,
O ! caitife Crescide now and evirmare
Gon is thy joie and al thy mirthe in yerthe,
Of all blithnesse now art thou blake* and bare,
There is no salve that helpin maie the sare,
Fell is the fortune, WICKID† IS THY WERTHE,
Thy blisse is banished, and thy bale unberde,
Under the Grete God if I gravin‡ were “Where men of Greece ne yet of Troye might herd !
Complaint of Crescide.

“Ye shall havin a shrewde name,
And WICKED loos§ and worse fame
Though you good loos§ have deserved.” CHAUCER.

“ And all is for thy WICKEDNESSE,
For that The failith straungeness||,
Thy herte I trowe be failid all.” IDEM.

“ But dignities, to whome they be comen, maken they him honorable and reverent ? Have they so grete strength, that thei maie putten vertue in hertes of folkes that usen the lordshippe of 'hem, or els may don away the vices ? Certes thei be not wont to don away WICKEDNES, but thei be wont

* Black, in its ground sense of deficient in, deprived of, wanting, as will be explained in the word BLACK.

† Lost, yielded up, abandoned, as has been shown above; and thus, the worth [value] is lost [gone, wanting].

‡ Buried.

§ Praise, commendation, in Dutch lof, love, in Latin laus.

|| Strength, strongness.

rather to shew WICKEDNESSE. And thereof cometh it that I have right grete disdain, that dignities be yeven to WICKED men. For whiche thing Catullus a consul at Rome [that hight Nonius] postome of botche, as who saith, he clepid* him a congregation of vices in his breast, as a postome is full of corrupscion: all were Nonius sat in a chaire of dignite. Seest thou not than, how great vilonies dignities done to WICKED men. Certes unworthiness of WICKED men shulde be the lasse sene, if they n'renounced with non honour."

CHAUCER. BOETH.

" And as the better spirit, when she doth bear
 A scorn of death, doth shew she cannot die,
 So when the WICKED soul death's face doth fear,
 Ee'n then she proves her own eternity." DAVIES.

" But since thy veins paternal virtue fires,
 Go and succeed, the rival aims despise,
 For never, never WICKED man was wise." POPE.

" As WICKED † dew as e'er my mother brushed,
 With raven's feather from unwholesome fen
 Drop on you both." SHAKSPEARE.

" The VIRTUOUS bezor is taken from the beast that feedeth on the mountains, and that without VIRTUE from those that feed in the vallies."—BACON.

CHAUCER sometimes uses the term wicke, and also wik, wikk, wike, in the sense of bad, base, worthless, less than the due value of the kind it belongs to, not in the state belonging to the sort from nature; when, I suspect, the word is as wijcke, wijke, wijcking, wiking, the participle present of the above explained wijcken, wijken; and thus as yielding, and so wanting, in the quality, duly belonging to the object in question.

————— "Plated halfe a fote thicke
 Of golde, and that ne was not WICKED ‡,
 But for to provin in all wise,
 As fine as ducket in Venise." CHAUCER.

* Called, termed.

† Virtuless, without good effect, and thus bad of the kind, virtue being here in the sense of physical power of good, power, strength.

‡ Of the full goodness or value; not base, not wanting in value, not below the due standard.

JOHNSON compounds wicked, of wic [bad] and head, and thus a bad head, but a man may be cursedly wicked, without having a bad head; wickedness, refers, when applied to man, rather to his nature, his heart than his head. Besides words are not compounded from different dialects of language. HORNE TOOKE, after sneering bitterly at JOHNSON, asserts roundly that wicked is as bewitched, and that it is grounded in the Anglo Saxon wiccan, to enchant, to charm, to conjure, to bewitch, an etymology as visionary and absurd as that he had been quarrelling with. One who is bewitched may act like a madman or a fool, but is not necessarily what we call wicked; nay, if he be truly bewitched he must be acquitted of all blame and wilfulness, and entitled to our pity. If there were no wickedness but that which sprung from magic and conjuration, we should soon be at a loss for the ordinary supply of society. A bewitching woman, is a charming woman, not a wicked woman, let the consequences of her charms be what they may, she is innocent of them and without blame. TOOKE seems to have been misled by the following passage which he quotes in confirmation of his view of the word wicked.

“David was lyk wyce so intanglid in the snares of the devill that with mouche paine he could quit himself from the wychid coupe that the devill had once brought him.”

DECLARATION OF CHRISTE BY JOHN HOPER.

WYCHID is not, in this place, as wicked but as enchanted, magically infected, adulterated by witchcraft.

TO BETRAY.

In the general import of that verb. Bij draghen; q. e. to carry to, to draw in, to bring in, to draw home or to. And we say, to draw in, in the import of to deceive, to entrap, to catch unfairly. Hence, also, its import of to show, to make evident, to demonstrate, as to bring home or close to [near to hand]. He betrayed no signs of fear, is, he showed no signs of fear, he brought no signs of fear in his person. He betrayed his friend, he drew in [took in] his friend, in a bad sense, as in our later expressions of to take in and draw in. He betrayed the town, is, he took in the inhabitants who had trusted to him. He betrayed his trust, he took in or drew in those who had given him the trust. The Dutch dragen, draghen, is the source of the German tragen, the French trahir, and the Latin trahere, and perhaps tradere. He betrayed his sense in not telling it, is as, he showed his sense in not telling it, in the direction of the word as above explained. Bij and the prefix be are groundedly the same word, and import simply, on the spot, in himself or itself; as when we say, he was by himself, and mean he was alone, all one, the same being, the identical person; to swear by, is to swear as in the presence of the object or being appealed to, or invoked by the person swearing.

“The Veian and the Gabian towers shall fall,
And one promiscuous ruin cover all,
Nor after length of years, a stone BETRAY
The place where once the very ruins lay.” ADDISON.

DRAKE.

As the male of the duck, the protector of her and her brood, the natural guard of his female and her young in their proper element. Draeck; q. e. dragon, as the Latin draco, in the same sense; but which word BILDERDIJK holds to be grounded in the Dutch primordial dra-en, to drag, to draw, and thus to move or go on as the snake does; to trail, draw, or slide along. And a dragon is the creature of imagination, by which it has been supplied with a fore-half bearing legs and wings, and with a hinder part formed after the shape of a serpent; constituting an object inspiring fear [alarm, surprise,] and thus used as the trope for a guard, watch, keeper, or scarecrow. And, in this latter meaning, we seem to have applied the term to the male of the duck and parent of its young. We call a dragon of chastity, a female who is affectedly and ferociously chary of her person, especially when such demonstration is made without any other cause than conceit or vanity. The French say, elle est un dragon de vertu, in the same sense. But our modern dragon is the French dragon, from the Italian dracone, the Latin draco, draconis. The word draeck has, I suspect, been anciently in use with us in the original meaning of this imaginary monster and trope of horror; for the crest [or former arms] of the name of Drake was, and, I believe, is now, a dragon. The Dutch term for a drake is waart, weert, woord, wartel, wertel, and grounded on wae-en, wae-e-ren, to flutter, to beat about and make a noise as that bird does frequently in the water. JOHNSON says the etymology of drake is unknown; but BAILEY offers, seemingly at haphazard and from analogy of sound, the Latin draco as such, without a rationale, or accounting for its being so.

POODLE.

As the species of dog known by that name, in French barbet, in German pudel; probably no other than the Dutch pool, poil, q. e. hair; in French poil, in Latin pilus; and thus as the dog which appears to be a mass of hair. Barbet is evidently connected with barbe, as hair.

CAUDLE.

The old French chaudel, chadeau, now chaudeau, a warm mixture given to people as refreshment, and evidently connected with the term chaud [hot]. In Dutch kandeel with the same import as the French chadeau.

STAR.

The Dutch ster, sterre, starre, star, sterne [as stella fixa, one not erratic, and thus distinguished from planet] is deduced by BILDERDIJK from staeren, the frequentative of staen, staan, to stand, not to move; to remain steady [fixed], whence our to stare, in Dutch staren, in the sense of to keep the eyes fixed upon one spot, to look steadfastly at; the French say fixer une personne, in the import of to stare at a person, by a same direction of sense. From staren comes also the Dutch adjective star, ster, immovable, stiff, indisplaceable, and which used substantively is star, as a fixed body, indefinitely. Hence also star-rig, since contracted to stark, sterck, firm, strong, and formerly in use with us in the same form and sense; but now chiefly for a compleutive or expletive adjunct, as in the terms stark-mad, stark-naked, &c. Hence also the Dutch storen, stooren, to interrupt, to disturb, to put an end to a going on; and the Dutch sterren, and our to stir, in the sense of to break from a motionless state into motion, and thus as imperfect inchoate motion, motion not yet completed; our stern and to steer belong here likewise, but of these words in another article. So is our to start another scion of this stock. Star is spelt by CHAUCER in many places sterre and in the plural sterris.

“ But nought wote I who did ‘hem worche *’,
 Ne where I am, ne in what countre ;
 But now will I out gon and se,
 Right at the wicket if I can
 Send ought where STRYNG † any man,
 That may me tellin where I am.” CHAUCER.

“ For, God be thankid, I can make avaunt,
 I fale my limmis STARK ‡ and sufficiant
 To don all that a man belongeth to,
 I wote my selvin best what I may do.

* Work. † Beginning to move, stirring. ‡ Strong, firm.

Though I be hōrā *, I fare as doth a tre
 That blossomith ere that frute ywost† be,
 The blossom'd tre is neither drie ne dedd,
 I felin no where hore but in my hedd :
 My harte and my limmir ben as grene
 As laurell is thorough the yere to sene."—CHAUCER.

SOUL.

Spelt saal, saul, by CHAUCER; in Dutch siel, in German seel, in Anglo-Saxon saul, sawel, in Gothick sal, in Islandick saal, in Swedish sial, in Persian salih; referred by BILDERDIJK to the antiquated adverb se [of which sa, so, are simply dialectical differences] as the primordial syllable expressive of the incipient perception or consciousness of existence [being] or identification, formed into the frequentative noun seel, siel, by the addition of the effector terminal el, and thus as existence ascertained by trial, brought into use by proving [put in action]. And self is no other than this se formed into a frequentative noun with the addition of the adjective terminal ig, and thus as the monosyllabick contraction of se-el-ig as identified existence [consciousness]. It need scarcely be repeated that the Latin se, the French soi, the Dutch sich [self], sijn [to be], sien [to see], as well as our so [formerly sa] and the Latin si [if] and sum [I am], with a host of other groundedly analogous terms, belong to this stock; [see article, It was at the end of my tongue, VOL. I. pp. 168—70, of this Essay]. The Dutch saeghen, seghen, to say, formerly spelt by us to segge, is the contraction of se-ig-en; se, as above explained, ig the identifying termination, en as the verbal infinitive terminal, which makes the noun a verb active, and thus brings it into a form expressive of action. To say a word, is to put a perception [conception] in action, to make it known either to ourselves or to others ; [see the article Word, p. 161]. In the familiar phrases of, there was not a soul there ; my soul [as a term of endearment] ; poor soul [an expression of pity], I suspect, the word soul is a travesty of sole [only one, solitary being], and thus, in the first instance, as no one else ; in the second, as my only one, to me the only being I care for, love ; in the third, the deserted lonely being. My life, as the term of endearment, is evidently the antiquated Dutch lijf [beloved, dear,] now spelt lief, and not as lijf [life]. Sole, as the Latin solus [only one], is sometimes spelt by CHAUCER soule.

* Hoary, grey-haired, old. † Grown, come to maturity.

“ A kyng ther was in tho yeris, that had noon heir male, Saff a doughtir, that he lovid as his own SAAL*.”

CHAUCER.

“ Alas ! quoth John, Aleine, for Crist’is peine
Lay down thy swerde, and I woll myne alswa,
I is full swift, God wote, as is a raa† ;
By Godd is ‘SAUL §, he shall not scape us both.’”

CHAUCER.

— “ Wherfor wylt hert I prey,
Have chere unto your sone, after my endyng day ?
For so God me help, and I lafft you behynd ;—
Should never man on lyve bryng it in my mynd,
To be no more yweddit, but SOULE || aloon.” CHAUCER.

“ Alein answerid, Johan, wilt thou sa ¶ ?” IDEM.

UGLY.

Offensive to the sight, deformed, disgusting. I suspect the same word with the antiquated Dutch ackelick [now akelig], horrible, inspiring horror [fear, disgust], frightful, nauseating, repulsive ; the adjective of ackel, eckel, nausea, disgust, whence ackelen [in German ekeln], to have a horror at, to nauseate, to be disgusted by ; and ackelick sounds

* Soul. † Roe, roebuck, in Dutch ree, reeboek.

‡ God’s soul, in the import of by the soul given me by God, and corresponding with our more modern, by the God that made me, [i. e. that gave me a soul.]

§ Single, solitary. ¶ So, in this way, in this like.

ugly, the terminal ly being here the dialectical change of the older lick, lik, lig [like]. The fancy of its being as ouphlike, and so like an ouph, elf, or goblin, recorded by JOHNSON under the term ugly, is bare-faced nonsense. The thema is in ac, ec, as sharpness. Egh, ack, is an angle corner; whence eghe, edge, in the sense of sharpness. Hence also eckel, eeckel, ekek, acorn, as the nut or fruit of the oak, which, from its nauseatingly repulsive taste, is unfit for human food, disgusting to the palate; and thus the nauseous nut or fruit, as opposed to the hazelnut, in Dutch hasel-not, as the nut of the haseler [hazel-tree], where hasel is from hase, as aes, aas, food, fit for eating. So that the acorn is as a fruit unfit for the food of man, and the hazel-nut as a food suited to that purpose. To this thema, belongs the Latin acutus, acidus, acus, acer, acuo, as well as the Dutch edik, vinegar, and eike, with which our term oak is a same word, exemplifying the dialectical change of the diphthong ei, ee, into oa,—our ACORN, spelt by Chaucer akehorn, is as eik-koorn; q. e. oak-corn, oak-fruit [produce, food]. Koren, korne, koorne, corn.

—“ If Cassio do remain,
He hath a daily beauty in his life
That makes me ugly.”—SHAKSPEARE.

“ O, I have passed a miserable night,
So full of ugly sights, of ghastly dreams.”

SHAKSPEARE.

“ Whan that the hevy sterre of the Cancre enchaseth by the bemes of Phœbus: that is to saine, whan that Phœbus, the Soun, is in the signe of Cancre, who so geveth than larghe his sedes to the felds that refusen to receve 'hem, let him gon begiled of trust that he had to his corne, to AKEHORNs of okes.”—CHAUCER. BOETH.

OBS. The Latin glands, glandis, was a collective term for various eatable fruits of an acorn-like substance, such as that of the cork-tree, the evergreen-oak, the chesnut, as well as the bitter acorn of our tree, upon which man never fed for an habitual subsistence ; but for which purpose some of those above-named are eminently adapted. The Dutch term for squirrel [the French écureuil] is eickhoren, eeckhoren [corruptedly inkhoorn], as the ellipsis of eickhoren—[eickhoorn]—dier; q.e. acorn-animal, animal that lives [thrives] upon acorns. Dier, animal, creature, living being.

A WIDOW BEWITCHED.

A wife, and so a family [an establishment], left by the husband [head of the household]. Er wee d'hoeve bewijst; q. e. in this case the family is in a state of languor [distress], by this the establishment [household] is in disorder [does not go on as it did, misses the head], and implying, from the absence of him who was its provider and manager, as the phrase is only used in relation to a family, or wife found in this predicament. Wee, woe, grief, state of languor, distress, melancholy, sadness. Hoeve, household, estate, husbandman's establishment, farm. Bewijzen, to give signs of, to show, to exhibit, to prove. The Dutch form of the term widow is weduwe, with an e instead of our i.

THISTLE.

In the usual meaning of the word. Distel, in the same sense in Dutch, and formed from diste [dust], and the ellipsis of distel-plant; that is the plant covered with dust, or dusted plant; and such in fact, as that which is found by road-sides and long-neglected fallow fields, it really is. Johnson and others tell us, it is the Anglo-Saxon thistel and the Dutch distel; but whence distel they don't tell.

TO FORGET.

[Formerly to forgeten, to foriete] as the Dutch vergheten vergeten, in the same sense, and formed of ver [from, off, away], and the antiquated geten, now eten [to eat], and is thus to eat out, to eat away, and impliedly to efface, to destroy, to obliterate, as that which is eaten away is ; and where can we find a more natural type of disappearance, as regards the object in question, than its being eaten up. In the same direction of sense we say, time has eaten away the inscription on this tomb; in the sense of, time has effaced the inscription on this tomb ; he was made to eat his words, in the sense of, he was made to efface [do away] the effect of them by recanting, or giving a turn to the meaning which did away with the offence of the former one. We say, to swallow an affront, in the sense of, to conceal [to bury] the resentment felt from it. We say, he was eaten up with care, and he was devoured by care, in the sense of buried [absorbed] in care, swallowed up in [devoured by] care. To forget a person, is to efface or put him out of sight as regards your mind [memory, affections]. The Dutch ver, as the privative prefix is travestied by us into for, as in forbid, forgive, forsown, forsake, &c. and is probably as the metathesis of our old fro, as from [away]. We say, out of sight, out of mind.

“ Nowe well knowe I [quoth she] other cause of thy maladie, and that righte grete ! Thou has lefte for to knownen thy selfe what thou art, through whiche I have plainly founden the cause of thy maladie, or else the entre* of recovering of thy helet. For why ? For thou art confounded with ~~ron-~~GETYNGE of thy selfe : thou sorowdeste that thou art exiled

* Entrance, opening, the Dutch intred, the French entrée, and our present entry, as the participle present of intreden, intreden, interden [to step in] compounded of in and trede, terden [to step, to tread].

† Wholeness, health, as the Dutch hele, the participle present of heelen, to make whole, to heal, and whole was formerly spelt hole : a whole man, is a man in complete health, one in an entire state, wholesome food is healthy food ; a hale man is a whole or entirely healthy man, and hale is the same word with heal ; to hale is to wish health to, to welcome ; health, is as wholeness, and from the same source—viz., the Dutch heelen.

of thy propre godes. And for thou ne wiste * which is the ende of things †, forthy deemeſt thou that felonous and wickid men be mighty and welful ‡: and for thou hast FORLIETEN || by whiche governmentes the world is governed, forthy wenest § thou that these mutacions of fortune fleten ¶ without governour. These ben the causes not only to malady, but certes great causes to death. But I thanke the actour, and the maker of hele, that nature has not forleten  The. I have grete nourishyng of thine hele, and that is the sothe sentence of governaunce of the world, that thou bileyest that the governing of it is not ſubject ne underput to the follie of the hapes †† aventureous, but to the reſon of God; and therefore doute The nothing, for of thiſ littil ſpark thine hete of lyfe ſhall ſhyne."—BOET. IN CHAUCER.

" Fro this tyme forth, tyme is to hold my pees ‡‡
 It werieth me this mattir for to trete,
 Let oþir lovirs put 'hem ſelue in prees §§.
 Their ſeson is, my time is now FORGOTTEN |||.
 Fortune by ſtrength the forcir [ſtrong box] has unſhete [un-ſhut].
 Wherein was ſperde ¶¶ all my worldly riſeſſe,
 And all the godes which that I have gete
 In my best tyme of youth and luſtineſſe."—CHAUCER.

THING.

As an indefinite perception; the inceptive unſpecified notice of an existence [ſubject, object]; an inchoate perception; an incipient effort of the

* Know, as the Dutch wist in the same ſeſſe.

† For this, on account of this, for this reaſon, as the Dutch voor die [for this].

‡ Full of happiness, joyful.

|| Forgotten, lost ſight of.

§ Suppoſeth, thinketh, as the Dutch waenſt in the same ſeſſe: waenen, to imagine.

¶ Fly away, paſſ away, as the Dutch vlieten, to flow on, to paſſ away.

 Abandoned, as the Dutch verlaſten in the same import.

†† Snaps, catches, chances, accidents.

‡‡ Peace.

§§ Price, value, importance.

||| Lost, out of ſight, diſappeared.

¶¶ Laid by, put by, ſpared, ſaved up, as the Dutch spaerd, gespaerd, in the same import; unless it is as an ellipsis of the Dutch verſperd, ſhut up, barred up, locked up.

mind in progress towards distinctness, as regards the subject in question. DING; q. e. thing; and the contraction of dij-ing; i.e. progressing, gradually becoming more, augmenting, increasing, and thus telling for no more than an indefinite existence, an unparticularised object. Nothing, is no existence; something, undefined existence; a good or bad thing, a good or bad existence. We say, he makes a good thing of that concern, in the sense of, he makes a good existence [livelihood, means of living] from that concern. I see a thing upon the ground, shows the advance of the mind towards a specification of the object in view, there is something, but I do not yet perceive what it is, and is thus, as the harbinger of forthcoming decision. Ding [thing], as the above dij-ing, is at bottom the same word with the antiquated dejing, deging, the participle present of dejen, deghen, to make, to do, to produce, to perform, grounded in the primordial de-en [to do, to the, to begin the production of, to bring forth], and is the verb of the particle de [the] as that which precedes or is set before the object to be specified, particularised, or named, as the man, the house, the horse, &c. &c. To the was once in common use with us in the sense of to advance, to progress, to go on, to thrive, to become more; and is the same word with the Dutch te dijen, te tijen, in the same sense; [see to DINE in VOL. I.] Di-en, de-en, da-en, do-en [to do] is a same thema. Thing; with us; ding, with the Dutch; res, in the Latin; are used in the import of membrum genitale utriusque sexus, with a direction of sense which need not be accounted for here. Nu waerom Adam ende Eva haer DINGEN gedeckt hebben sullen wy op een andermael wel eens aenraken; [the reason why Adam and Eve covered their things will be touched upon by us in another part of the work]. DE MERWEDE. Imperium, litem, Venerem, cur una not at res? AUSONIUS. From the above deijen, deghen, the Dutch have their deegh, deech [dough], as the primary matter for advancement into bread or crust. Ding, gheding, has also the import of lawsuit [process] as the inceptive mean of a decision, and thus as an indefinite step to a judgment, an advance to determination. In the same direction of meaning, we use the terms cause, case [causa, casus] as the turning out [production] of a definite event [decision, determination, end]; for both these terms spring from the Dutch ka-en, ke-en, to turn; and we say, as it may turn up or out, in the sense of, as it may happen or end, as the event may prove to be. Hence also our chance, the Dutch kans, the French changer, the Italian cangiare, as well as chose of the French language and cosa of the Italian. Nil fieri sine causa potest, without a cause [a happening, a beginning] no effect can take place [be produced]. Verdijen, whence our antiquated to fordoe, fordoen, fordon, is as verdij-en; verdingen, to undoe, to unthing, to become undone, to dissolve.

“ I se no more, but that I am ~~fordoe~~,
Mine inheritaunce mote I nedis sell,
And ben a beggir, &c.”

CHAUCER.

TO DIE.

[Formerly to dyen]; to go off, to pass on, to change the state of existence, to proceed elsewhere, to be advanced to another state of being indefinitely. Te dyen; q. e. to be promoted, to be advanced, to be raised, to rise, to be extended. When the verb is referred, by the context, to existences of a lower order than man, the import seems to be simply that of to go or pass on to another state or form of being than that of the one in which they had before appeared. When used in relation to the human kind, it seems to assume its deponent turn of meaning, and to be as promoveri in maius sive melius; angeri quodam motu interiori; and we say of one who is dead or dying, he or she is gone or going to a better [happier] state. Thus the direct and single import of te dijen seems to be a sounder and truer ground for our TO DIE than that of the ellipsis of a phrase, as hesitatingly suggested in the 46th page of the first Volume of this Essay; for te dijen te niet [to perish] applies simply to things done by man. To die of a fever, is to be advanced [passed, carried on] to a higher state by a fever. The French have the verb trépasser as a formal term for to die; importing by its constituency a passing over to another place, and applicable only to a dying of the human being. Tré, the Italian tra, the Latin trans, over, beyond, across; passer, as the Italian passare, to pass. Il est pâle comme un trepassé, he is as pale as a corpse. To die [dye] as to tinge, is to advance, to improve, to better by the addition of colour, to advance to another stage of appearances. The old Dutch diet [people] and thus tribe, race, nation, is as diet, died, gedied, multiplied, increased, advanced in numbers, and as the participle præterite of the same dijen, di-en. For others of the numerous derivatives from te dijen, see the articles TO DIE IN ONES SHOES; TO DINE; HE COULD TURN HIS HAND TO ANY THING; to be found in the preceeding pages of this essay.

"Here at this tombe must I die and starve*."

CHAUCER.

See page 46 of the first Volume, for the extract from CHAUCER where TO DIE is spelt in the original form of TO DYEN.

A DONKEY.

The well known term or metaphor for an ass. Er die hove keye; q. e. there is that which disgraces a turn [ride, excursion]; to take a turn or excursion upon such an animal as that is lowering the amusement, making it ridiculous, mean. Implying that the horse, and not the ass, is the animal most becoming to be used for occasions of pleasure, amusement, or parade. Die, that which. Hone, as the third person, potential mood of honen, to disgrace, to dishonour, to lower, to turn into ridicule. Keye, a turning, a turn, as the participle present of the primordial ke-en, in the sense of to turn, and of which keeren, to turn round, is the frequentative form; hence our key, as the turning in the lock, and quay, as that which is turned to, and the Dutch keye, a madman, or one whose brain is turning. But keye has been already explained in this essay. Er die hone keye, sounds donkey, as will be found upon trial.

* Stiffen.

TALL.

In the usual acceptation of the term. Tale; q. e. telling, counting, reckoning, and thus implying an appearance in size, which at once entitles the object in point to be counted [reckoned] one which duly belongs to its kind, one about which the right to be reckoned of the kind to which the epithet is applied cannot be disputed. Tale, taele, the participle present of the old taelen, talen, now tellen, to count, to tell. A tall tree, is one of conspicuous size, height; and so a tall man, a tall horse, &c. One that height and consequent distinctness causes to be reckoned at first sight an undoubted specimen of its kind. We say, a thing speaks for itself, when the quality in question is self evident. We say, such and such an appearance bespeaks it to be so or so, meaning, entitles it to be counted so and so.

“ When the Abbot of St. Martin was born, he had so little the figure of a man, that it bespoke him rather a monster.”
LOCKE.

In the course of use, this epithet, as due or proportionate size, or appearance, has come to be used in the sense of height, but always proportionate height for the object in question ; and sometimes also strength proportionate to appearance.

Tall is referred by JOHNSON, on the credit of Bailey, to tal, which he says is Welsh in the same sense ; others refer it to the French term taille [shape, figure] ; but une jolie taille refers as much to a short person as to a tall one.

“ I'll swear thou art a TALL fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt not be drunk ; but I know thou art no TALL fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt be drunk ; but I would that thou would'st be a TALL fellow of thy hands.”

SHAKESPEARE.

OBS.—By time and custom the word has come to be used chiefly in relation to full size of kind in relation to height ; and more recently, to that quality alone, as in fact the one the more generally observable, as well as suitable, in those objects to which it is applied in the context with which it is used.

—“ Two of nobler shape, Erect and tall.”—MILTON.

“ May they increase as fast, and spread their boughs,
As the high fame of their great owner grows :
May he live long enough to see them all
Dark shadows cast, and as his palace TALL†.

WALLER.

YES.

Evidently from our former equivalent ye wisse, jwis, the Dutch adverb gewis, jewis, wis [certainly surely].

—“ ‘ Lorde ! is ther soche blisse emong
These lovirs, as thei can so faire endite ?’
‘ YE WISSE,’ quoth freshe Antigone, the white,
‘ For all the folke that have or ben alive,
Ne coudin well the blisse of love descriue.’”

CHAUCER.

* Hard-working, laborious, as your size should indicate.

† Here the idea of any quality of size, except height, is excluded by the absurdity of including any other.

" Iw is mine owne dere herte true,
 I wote that when ye next upon me se,
 So lost have I mine hele *, and eke mine hewe,
 Cresseide shall not conne tho knowin me,
 Iw is, mine hert 'is daies †, my ladic fre †,
 So thurstith aie mine herte to behold
 Your beaute, that unneth my life I hold.

CHAUCER.

OBS.—But our yea, ye, in the sense of yes, is the Dutch ja, the root of ja-en, je-en [in German jehen] to say, whence, probably, our ultra-familiar term to jaw, as to talk; hold your jaw, is as cease your talk, where jaw is as the participle present of te ja-en. The term jaw, in jaw-bone, as that which is put in motion when sound is uttered, belongs here; the jaw-bone of an ass, is as the working of that bone when that animal brays, and in both instances in a secondary sense. Ja, is as the imperative of the Dutch seg, but to be construed in the first person, and thus as, I say, in the sense of I agree, I see what you mean and I agree with you. The Latin has it, vel ai vel nega; q. e. let us have either yes or no; and ai is the imperative of aio, I say, answering precisely to the Dutch ja, the imperative of ja-en, to say.

A TURNOAT.

In the well-known import of one who changes his former principles, deserts his colours. Er taane kout; q. e. there the talk becomes of another hue; in him we see a tarnish in the ground of his discourse; there we see a defection of the usual colour; he deserts the colour he belonged to. Taane, changes hue, eclipses, tarnishes, as the third person potential mood of tuenen, taanen, tenen, to tan, to eclipse, to become of a darker hue, to tarnish. Kout, discourse, talk, conversation. Taan sounds as we pronounce turn; and kout sounds coat. Hij ziet er heel getaand, his face is entirely tanned [made darker].

* Health.

† Light, joy.

‡ Fair.

“Courtesy itself must turn to disdain, if you come in her presence. Then is courtesy a TURNCOAT.”—SHAKSPEARE.

MOTHER.

As the female parent; the Dutch moeder, in the sense of, de gene die moedt; q. e. the one who loves, holds dear, takes to heart, feeds from her own body, makes as her own heart; for moedt is as the third person present of moeden, moeien, as the verb of moed, gemoed, heart, affection, feeling, conscience, consciousness, and thus to make as the heart; in the same direction of sense as the German hertzen, herzen [to caress, to fondle, to hold as his heart] is formed from hertz, herz [heart]. Te moede nemen, is, to take to heart. Bemoien, is, to make oneself anxious [to trouble or bestir] about. Moe [in some dialects mu] is a thema of wide extent and the source of numberless terms. The German mutter, the Anglo-Saxon moder, the Islandick mooder, the Greek μήτηρ, the Latin mater, and the Persian mader, are the same word with moeder, as well as our mother. In the like way as moeden is formed out of moed, is minnen, beminnen [to love, to affect, to regard with affection, to feel strongly for] formed from min, minne [sense, thought, consciousness, affection, feeling], whence our term mind; but min, minne, is there in its ancient and ground import, from which it has become to bear that of love in all the directions of that word, and also of nurse, as a mother's substitute. Min, minne, and sin, sinne, are correlative words in Dutch, and the sources of our terms sense and mind, as well as of the Latin sensus and mens, mentis, mente. Sijn SIN op jemand setten, and sijn GEMOED op jemand setten, are equivalent expressions for, to set one's heart [affections] upon some being ; to put or fix some one in possession of our heart, affections, love. Beminnen [to love, to believe, to affect], and besinnen [to bear in mind, to feel for, to care for, to think of, to hold in thought] have a synonymous import. We say, to mind, in the sense of to care for. Don't mind him, don't care for him. She was never out of my mind ; she never ceased to be the object of my affection, of my thoughts. And mind, as intellectual power or capacity is simply as the mean [faculty, power] of knowing, feeling, apprehending, perceiving, being affected by, being inclined by. I have a great mind to do it, is as I have a great inclination. To have lost the mind, is to have lost the due guidance of such natural faculty. I have no mind for her, is as, I have no affection, no feeling [no natural inclination], for her, she never enters my thoughts [head, mind]. All of one mind, is, all of one feeling, all affected alike. I told him my mind, I expressed my feelings to him. SENSELESS of the loss and MINDLESS of the loss, are both equivalent to without feeling the loss ; not being sensible or mindful of the loss.

“ As the strong eagle in the silent wood,
MINDLESS of warlike rage, and hostile care,
Plays round the rocky cliff, or crystal flood.” PRIOR.

“ God first made angels bodiless, pure, MINDS ;
Then other things which mindless bodies be ;
Last he made man.” DAVIES.

“ The SENSELESS grave feels not your pious sorrows.” ROWE.

MOTHER, as mouldiness, is the Dutch modder, anciently modere, an adjective formed from moud [mould] as mo-él or mo-ér, moér [mud, mother], and connected with the Latin mollis and the French mou [soft] ; also with the Dutch muycken, meucken [to mollify, to soften, to meeken] ; whence our muck and mixin, in the sense of dung-heap, heap of dung, as that which becomes soft by being heaped together and so fermenting, and then resolving into soft matter.

EGLANTINE.

As the wild sweet-briar, the wild briar or rose, is the Dutch eghelen-tier, in the same sense; corruptedly egelantier; by us changed into eglantine, spelt by CHAUCER egalatere and egelentere; and means thorn-tree; as eghel, eggel, prickle; from eggen, to edge, to point, to sharpen, to put an edge to; and egel-dier, is the hedge-hog or prickle animal; the thema being ac, eg, sharpness; tier, tere, is the old Dutch word for tree, as the participle present of tieren, to grow, to shoot out; and our tree is merely the metathesis of the Dutch tere. Our term auger, as that with which it is bored, the Dutch avegher, evegher, egger, springs from the same root. Our eager and the French aigre belong here, in the sense of sharp. EAGER for his dinner, sharp set for his dinner.

“The leaf of EGLANTINE, not to slander,
Out-sweetened not thy breath.” SHAKSPEARE.

“O'er-canopied with luscious woodbine
With sweet musk-roses, and with EGLANTINE.”
SHAKSPEARE.

CIDER.

In French cidre, in Italian sidro, formed from the Latin sidere, to settle, to subside, to sink to the bottom, and thus as the juice that drains or sinks from fruit [from apple] when mashed. In Dutch, appeldrank [appledrink].

“Beva il SIDRO d'Ingilterra,
Chiv nol gir presto sot terra.—REDI.

“Il SIDRO, che è vino de mele, se è fatto quando le mele sono mature, si è caldo e umido temperatamente.”—ALDROVANDO.

“We had also to drink, wholesome and good wine of the grape, a kind of CIDER made of the fruit of that country: a wonderful pleasing and refreshing drink.—BACON.

Mezerai, in his notes upon Menage, says cidre is as the Latin citreus!

BIG.

Large [great], as in the phrase big with young, in French pleine with relation to beasts, and grosse in relation to women. The word, as well as pig, is, in the ground, the same with the Dutch big, bigghe, pigghe, vigghe [a pig] and that a mere changeling of wiggle [whence our wight, wicht, weight] gestation, bearing, carrying [we say, to go with young] formed from the preterite of wagen, in the sense of to bear; [and we say, child-bearing, and to bear children, and the Romans ferre uterum, in the same relation of sense]; ick wage, ick wiege [wige] I bear, I bore [I carried]; and our big was originally in relation to size arising from being with young, and then extended to large size in general; and pig is as a cause of that kind of enlargement of form, and thus a bearing, that which is borne. I suspect our term bitch, formerly spelt biche, as the female of the dog kind, is of this stock, and as the gestation or carrying of the young of that race of animals, the young-bearer or producer of that race, or else as the one rendered large or weighty by her male. And also our wight, as creature, being, animal, in a general sense. We had formerly the verb to bigge, in the sense of to enlarge, to extend, to swell out. A PIG of lead, is a stated weight of lead.

"*Ther servauntes be to them unholde,
But they can doublin their rental,
To bigger 'em castles, bigger 'em holde.*"—CHAUCER.

"*He [THE PRIEST] woll have tithing and offring, Mangre whosoever it grutche,
And twise on the daie he woll sing,*

Godd 'is priestis ne were none soche.

He mote go hunt with dogge and biche;
And blowen his horne and cryin hey,
And sorcerie usen as a witche,

Soche kepyn evill Peter's key."

IDEM.

Obs.—Bitch, as the reproachful term for a vexatious female, I suspect has nothing to do with the female of the dog, but to be simply a travesty of the Dutch bitse, spiteful, bitter, scolding, and connected with bijten, to bite, to snap, and also with bitter in the import of biting or disgusting to feeling.

“John had not run a madding so long, if it had not been for an extravagant bitch of a wife.”—ARBUTHNOT.

“Him you’ll call a *dog and her a bitch.” POPE.

BOARD.

As plank, and in another sense as table, formerly spelt bord. Berd, bord [in German bret]; q. e. plank, board; as the contraction of gebord, gebeurd, the participle præterite of beuren, to bear; and thus that which is borne, supported by something else, and in no other way is a board used, or for any other purpose designed. Berd, bord, in this sense, has a double plural form, berder, berderen, borden, borderen. But bord, in the import of table, plate, trencher, and in fact of any bordered piece of flat wood, is as be-oord, boord, geboord, bordered, margined, having only border for the plural form; and this is our board in the sense of table, as of margined or bordered plank; whence to board in the meaning of to table, and so to provide with table or plates, as the means of eating [support, maintenance]; as in the phrases boarding-school, boarding-house, board-wages, &c. The Dutch boord, as border, edge, rim, side, is as be-oord; oort, oord, rounded, bordered, surrounded, circumscribed, from oren, to circumscribe, to go round, to draw round, to make round, and is grounded in the letter O, as the type of circumference, not in the sense of the shape inferred by the word round, but as naked, simple, circumvention, for we may go round a square as well as a circle, in the sense here carried. The old French orle, and the Latin ora, in the sense of border, belong to the same thema.

* As explained in a foregoing page.

“At Alexandre he was when it was won;
Full oft times he * had the BORD begon,
Abovin alle naciouns in Pruce.” CHAUCER.

Obs. In the phrases board of green cloth, board of general officers, council-board, &c. &c.; board seems to be as the table, around the margin of which the members concerned sit to transact the affairs for which they are present.

BROADSIDE.

The ship of war's side from stem to stern, the whole side of a ship of war. Berood syde; q.e. the berreddened [inflamed] side, the side which becomes red with fire, importing the whole tier of guns which each side of a man-of-war is furnished with; and thus as the side which becomes red when they are fired [when a broadside is given]; the side which flashes red when its guns are used for the purpose designed. In its literal form, what can the term broad have to do here? In form of letter, as applied to the side of a ship, it makes sheer nonsense. And yet JOHNSON unreflectingly imputes this meaning to broad and side. Berooden, rooden, to redden, and berood sounds broad. Syde, side.

“In a heaven serene, refulgent arms appear,
Red'ning the skies and glitt'ring all around,
The temper'd metals clash.” DRYDEN.

“His eyes dart forth red flames, which scare the night,
And with worse fires the trembling ghosts affright.” COWLEY.

* Took the first place at table.

" From vaster hopes than this he seemed to fall,
 That durst attempt the British admiral ;
 From her BROADSIDES a ruder flame is thrown.
 Then from the fiery chariot of the sun." WALLER.

TERMAGANT.

Scolding, fiery, furious, repulsive person ; a term usually applied to the obstreperous female as the most forbidding and revolting sample in which that brutal failing can be exhibited, one which exhibits the strongest and strangest contrast to the natural character of the sex. Ter maë gaende; q. e. exciting the stomach itself, stirring up [revolting] the stomach, and thus implying turning the stomach itself by disgust [offensive to the very maw, stomach]. Ter, to the, mae, maeghe, maag: maw, stomach. Gaende, the participle present of gaen, gaan, to go to, to reach, to affect ; as when we say, it went against my stomach, in the sense of, it disgusted [offended] me, made me sick. JOHNSON refers the substantive term, to a kind of heathen deity extremely vociferous and tumultuous in the ancient farces and puppet shows ! MR. URRY, in his glossary to CHAUCER, imputes the term to the Latin termagnus ! ! !

" But in that countre n'as there none
 Ne neither wife ne childe ;
 Till him there came a grete giaunt,
 His name was called Sir Oliphant,
 A perilous man of deede.
 He sayid, childe, by TERMAGAUNT^{*},
 Bnt if thou pricke out of my haunt[†],
 Anon I slea thy stede.
 Here wonith the queene of fairie,
 With harpe, and pipe, and simphonie,

* By my resentment, at the risk of offending me, by the danger of my anger [revenge] if you do ; and not as Mr. URRY fancies by the deity or any thing divine. It is the oath-like form of the phrase which seems to have misled Mr. URRY.

† See article to HUNT in a forgoing page of this Volume.

Within this place and boure *.
 The childe saied, also maie I the †,
 Tomorrow woll I metin The Whan I have mine armoure."

CHAUCER.

"Let a man, though never so justly, oppose himself to those that are disordered in their ways, and what one amongst them doth not commonly stomach at such contradiction, storm at reproof, and hate such as would reform them."—HOOKER.

"Hie mihi risum magis quam STOMACHUM moveri solet." CICERO.

Obs. The present Dutch seem to have transferred the import of anger, resentment, disgust, from maë, maeghe, maag [stomach] to the term krop [stomach, crop], and still to have reserved the same viscus for the type of a same trope though in a different form of word. Dat stak hem in de krop, that stuck in his craw, made him angry; he could not stomach that [digest that]. It stuck in his mawe, is a popular expression for, it stuck in his stomach, it made him angry, it offended him; and maw and the Dutch maë, maeghe are the same word. He is crop sick, is a phrase in use with us.

TO PANT.

To be distressed from want of power to breathe, to breathe with difficulty and labour. Toe bangt; q. e. completely straitened, utterly distressed, in a complete state of anguish, in great difficulty. Which phrase or term has been travestied from analogy of sound into to pant, and in this shape came into use as the infinite of a verb instead of the original participle and preposition; as is the case in so many other examples to be found in our present masqueraded dialect. Banghen, is as be-anghen, enghen; and anghen, is to be straitened and to straiten, to be oppressed or to oppress, to be distressed or to distress, to be narrowed or to narrow, hence our terms anguish, anger, angle, as well as the Latin anxius, angor, angere, anchora, and the Greek αγνω, αγνω, &c. We say, he panted for riches and honours, in the sense of he was anxious to get riches and honours, he was distressed to get them. Possibly the Latin anhelare, to pant, is grounded in the Dutch words ang-haelen, to draw or fetch with difficulty. Anhelabat nullus equis sub vomere. Anhelat clade futurd. Tussis anhela. Anhelanti similis. Verba inflata et anhelata gravius. The Latin halare [to breathe], is probably no other than a frequentative form from the Dutch haelen, to fetch, to bring, to catch, to draw, to seek for. We say a man is narrow-chested, narrow in his circumstances, in the sense of not sufficiently provided with breathing room, in the one case, and with means or money in the other, but always inferring distress in both instances. To some it might seem that the term to pant was more directly to be fetched from toe-pijnd; q. e. pained to the greatest degree, tormented to the utmost, in French très peiné; where pijnd, gepynd, would be as the participle past of pijnen, to labour, to be in pain; and which form of word sounds nearly as to pant, but the first given seems to answer strictly to all the relations the word pant is used in, while the other does not reach them all so strictly. JOHNSON and BAILEY derive to pant from the French panteler, but that is merely a frequentative form of our own to pant. To pant seems to imply frequency, restlessness, agitation, iteration; but to pain does not; we say a fixed pain.

* Dwelling.

† Prosper, thrive.

“The whispering breeze PANTS in the leaves, and dies upon the trees.”

POPE.

TO COPE.

To contend with, to strive against, to oppose, to make head against. Toe kop; q. e. to the head, to the intellect, as the best resource both for attack and defence, and implying the making use of the understanding to the utmost in the case in point. In this direction of sense we say, he made head against his enemies; he headed the party; he is the head of his party; the party was without a head, &c. Kop, in German kopff, head, intellect, understanding. By the form of the travesty, after the loss of the original term, the phrase has been used as a verb. Kop, in the form of coppe, was used by CHAUCER in the sense of top, head, point. To cope, in the sense of to cover, in the expression to cope a wall, is the same verb as above, in the sense of to head, to top, to put a top to; and coping, as a covering of a wall, either of stone or what else, is as the heading or topping of the wall.

“ Upon the coppe right of his nose be hade
A wert, and thereon stode a tuffte of heeres,
Red as the bristles of a sow’is eres.” CHAUCER.

“ Know my name is lost,
By treason’s tooth bare gnawn, and canker bit;
Yet I am noble as the adversary I come to COPE.”

SHAKSPEARE.

“ I and my friend
Have by your wisdom, been this day acquitted
Of grievous penalties; in lieu whereof,
Three thousand ducats, due unto the Jew,
We freely COPE* your courteous pains withall.”

IBID.

OBS. JOHNSON tells us to cope, is of doubtful etymology. JUNIUS deems it as the Dutch koopen, to buy. But to cope with a man in conversation, can have no relation to the buying of him. To cope with another in kindness, is not to buy by kindness, but to endeavour to overcome him in kindness, to exceed his kindness to you, by your’s to him; to match him in that respect.

* Oppose to, strive against [content with] in courteous return [reward, remuneration]. We oppose 3000 Ducats to your pains; we set them in balance against.

NIGHTMARE.

The Dutch nachtmare, nachtmerrie, nachtmeer, naghtmare, in the same sense. The term signifies nighthorse, but not in the import of a horse sitting upon your stomach, but in that of a bedfellow; for merrie as paard is here used for huurpaard [a hackney or hired horse], and thus nachtmerrie is as a temporary or hired bedfellow, an additional bed-concern. Koetsmeer, is also another Dutch term for the same thing, where koet is bed; of this the French have made their word cochemar, cauchemar. So that in the ground the nightmare is no other than the trope of a troublesome temporary bedfellow. Merrie was formerly used for horse in a general import without reference to sex. According to SIR WILLIAM TEMPLE, the mare, in our form of this term, is as mara, a spirit which in the northern mythology is supposed to torment and suffocate sleepers!

PATH.

The Dutch pad in the same sense, and the rootword of paden, to level, to smooth, to make even, and itself as the participle præterite of the still older pa-en, ba-en, to level, to make even; whence baan, a path or plain place, a levelled spot, and probably our word barn as the spot levelled for threshing, &c. Baan sounds barn.

BROTHEL.

The metathesis of the, with us, antiquated term bordel, the French bordel [bawdy-house], from the Dutch bordeel in the same meaning; the diminutive of the old term boerde [boerschap] a labourer's hut or cot, and thus in the sense of a bad house, a mean house, a house of an inferior kind; and we still use the expression a bad house, for a house of ill fame, a brothel. I suspect our term bawdy-house is as boerdig-huijs, dirty house, mean [badl] house, and probably, in those days, the only kind used for the purposes bawdy-houses usually serve to. A bawd, as the keeper of this house, is, I take it, as er boerde; there the hut [bad, mean house]; and, in course of time, applied to the owner or keeper. Baudy, was formerly used in the sense of dirty, filthy. Boerdig sounds bawdy, as boerde does bawd. Bawdy talk, and dirty conversation, are synonymous phrases. CHAUCER makes for, in the shape of fawe, rhyme with drawe. Boerde, is from boer, a peasant, a boor.

“He somewhat hath fro weping him withdrawe,
And semith me that he desirith *rawe,
With you to ben all night of to devise Remedie of this, if there were any wise.”

CHAUCER.

“ His overiste sloppé is not worth a mite
As in effect to him, so mote I go,
It is al BAUDY †, and to tote also.”

IBID.

“ And the same shall the manne tell plainly with all the circumstances and wether he hath sinned with common BORDEEL women or none, or doen his sinne in holie times, or none, &c.”—IBID.

“ Or these that hauntin simonie,
Or provost full of trechirie,
Or prelate living jolillie,
Or priest that halt his quein him by,
Or old whoris hostillers ‡,
Or other BAUDES † or BORDILLERS †.”

IBID.

SWALLOW.

As the bird; the Dutch zwaluwe [swaeluwe, zwalge] as zwalige, from zwalen, zwelen, now zwaaien [to sway about in circles, to skim about and around] and thus as the zwalende [swayer]. And is not swaying the habit of that bird?

* For; not faine as MR. URRY supposes.

† Dirty, filthy, like that of a common labourer; for baudy refers to the state of the hut and its inhabitants in regard to concomitant filth and abjectness.

‡ All meaning bawdy-house-keepers.

" When swallows fleet soar high and sport in air,
He told us that the welkin w^ould be clear." GAY.

LEFT-HAND.

As the old Dutch luft-hand; q. e. the relieving hand, the lightening hand, the assisting [auxiliary] hand, not the principal one, but that which is ever ready to aid it in the efforts it is used to make. The right hand is the directing and so the chief and principal hand, and the left, as it were, its adjutant or assistant, and so the seconding hand. We say, he was the other's right-hand man, in the sense of his chief resource or reliance. The Latin læva, lævus, in a same import, seems grounded in a similar direction of sense, as connected with lævare, to smooth, to facilitate, to remove obstacles, and thus importing the sense of the assisting hand. Levare, to lift, to lighten, seems also to belong to this Latin stock. Luft, lufte, also luchte, is the participle present of luften, luchten, now lichten, to lighten, to make the burthen less, to relieve the weight of a thing, and so to aid. In THE DIVERSIONS OF PURLEY, the term is explained as leaved, lev'd, left, and as the hand we are taught to leave out in general use: an etymology, I know to have been suggested to the author of that work by an acquaintance, but am persuaded it is not the true one.

EVENING.

As the participle present of the Dutch aven, to go off, to depart, in Latin abire, and thus as the departing light, day, time, hour; in Dutch avond, avend; in German abend; and grounded in the old ave, af, off, hence, from; whence the Latin ab, in the same import.

FAST.

As in the phrases time passes fast, to fly fast, to go fast, &c. Haest; q. e. quick, nimble, hasty, speedy, springing from the obsolete verb haen, whence haest, haste, and haasse, hasse, the calf of the leg, as the main assistant to speed, the sinew of speed; as well as haas, hare, as the speedy animal, of which our own term hare is probably the masculine or effector form. The intermutating quality of the aspirates f and v is too well known to require notice, and little less frequent is that of the h with v. Hesperus and vesperus are the same word, and so are the Spanish hermoso and the Latin formosus, the Spanish hijo and Latin filius, the Spanish hierro and the Italian ferro and Latin ferrum, cum multis aliis. The Dutch haesten, the German hasten, our to hasten, the French haster [now hâter] and the Latin festinare, are the same word, dialectically modified. To go post haste and to go post fast have the same sense; hastily and fastly have a same meaning, and so have don't go so hastily and don't go so fast; what difference is there between you eat too fast and you eat too hastily? JOHNSON says, fast in the above sense is grounded in the Welsh ffest! !

TO WRITE.

I suspect, is from the Dutch vrijten, wrijten; q. e. to turn, as is done on the lathe, that is, by turning backwards and forwards [to and fro, up and down] in Latin tornare, to form or fashion by turning or twisting to and fro, which is what is done when we write; and metaphorically also when we compose [handle] a subject in the mind. When we write, we form, or shape, by turning the instrument we use for the purpose, up and down; when we frame or meditate a subject matter for use, we turn it backwards and forwards in our mind, and so form or shape it for production. A new turn of thought, is a new cast or form of thought. He turned it in his mind, is he fashioned it [shaped it] in his mind. It is written in the heart of man; it is charactered [shaped, formed] in the heart of man, subaudito, by the hand of nature.

“About it, and write happy when thou’st done.”
SHAKSPEARE.

Set about it, and when you have done it, form the thought in your mind you are happy in having done it. So that to write and to turn, in the sense of to shape or form by to and fro motion, are in the ground synonymous terms in use. Wrijten, to writhe, to turn, to twist, to distort, springs from the older wra-en, wre-en, wrijen, to depart from the straight [due, natural] line, as is done when it is turned. Hence our old to wrie, and our present awry and wry.

“The day’ is honour, and the heven’ is eye,
The night’ is foe, all this clepe I the sonne,
Gan westrin, and downward for to WRIE*.”

CHAUCER.

A wry face, is a face distorted from its natural lineament. BILDERDIJK grounds the Dutch schrijven [to write], the source of the Latin scribere, in rijven, to scratch, to scrape, to tear, to rive; and the old mode of writing was by scratching [making incisions] upon a suitable substance. A far more ancient term in Dutch for schrijven is prijven, and from the same source. From schrijven we have our term scrivener, and probably our old scrite, as writing.

“I trow it were too long you to tary
If I told you of every SCRITE and bond †
By which she was scoffid in all his lond.” CHAUCER.

OBS. I have little doubt our old to schrive and schritten, in the import of to confess, as well as schrift [confession] are connected with the above rijven, in the sense of to open [to tear open, to open compunctively] the heart or mind; and are possibly the contraction of schie-rijven; q. e. to

* To depart from its upward point; to go downwards from its utmost pitch [highest point].

† As the Dutch band, volume of a book or writing.

tooth, is as ta-end, from ta-en, the primordial of the verb ta-eren, now tarnen, to tear, in German zerren; that tand [tooth] is as that which tears [pulls] to pieces. The substantive taunt is as tande, the participle present of the verb. MINSHEW is right in regard to the verb to taunt, and JOHNSON has perceived him to be so. The French tancer, to reproach, to taunt, is the same verb.

TURBOT.

Tarbot: in the same sense; but properly torboth; q. e. doornboth, the prickly-skinned flat-fish; that is, prickly in regard to the spine-like scales seen on the back of the fish, and which the Jews have not yet decided to be scales or not, in reference to the fish coming into the category of those permitted or forbidden to be eaten according to a rule of their persuasion. Doorn, thorn, prickle. Both, bot, as the ellipsis of bot-visch, flat-fish, flounder. Doorn, deurn, doorne, whence our thorn is the root-word of tarenen, now tarnen, tornen, and itself the contraction of taring, taarning [tearing]. Hence the Latin tornus, the turning machine or lathe, that which shaves, cuts, tears away the portion intended to be taken off by it, and tornare, to turn, to cut [tear] into shape, into the form intended. Hence also our to turn, as to cut or shape by the lathe.

A PAIR OF TONGS.

As in the terms a pair of tongs [sugar-tongs, smith's tongs, fire-tongs]. Er by er af togen's; q. e. there by there is drawn out or from, by that mean the thing in question is taken from [drawn from or out]; and thus implying the instrument by which things are taken up, or hold of, to be removed. A pair of tongs, like a pair of bellows [already explained], in relation to a single instrument, is, in the literal sense, a solecism and sheer nonsense, and thus, an evident travesty or disguise of some lost form of words; for language admits of neither word or phrase which is not grounded in common sense and logically true. Togen, getogen, drawn, as the past participle of tijen, to draw; 's, is, is; and togen's sounds tongs. The tongs and tongs are familiar abbreviation of the above phrase; which is represented in Dutch by the equivalent tang [pincers, forceps, fire-tongs, fire-holder, fire-taker], and no other than a contracted participle of the primordial ta-en, in the sense of to lay hold of, whence our antiquated tane [now taken]. Tong, as part of a buckle [sometimes spelt tongue], is evidently of this stock, in the sense of that which holds in, takes hold of [the latch]. Er by er, there by that, and, b and p intermutating, sounds a pair.

“ So thoughtin I tho anon blive
 That wordleasse answeres in no toun
 Was TANE* for obligatioun.
 Ne called surely in no wise
 Amongst them that callid ben wise.” CHAUCER.

“ Their hilts were burnish'd gold, and handle strong
 Of mother pearl, and buckled with a golden TONG.” SPENSER.

“ Get a PAIR OF TONGS like a SMITH'S TONGS, stronger and toothed.”— MORTIMER.

“ Another did the dying brands repair
 With iron tongs, and sprinkled oft the same
 With liquid waves.” SPENSER.

OBS.—A pair of pincers is formed in the same way, pincers being as pinsce er's; q. e. pinching [a holding, gripping] there is; pinsse as the participle present of pinssen, to pinch, to nip.

“ No wher so besy a man as he ther n'as,
 And yet he semid besier than he was.

* Taken.

In terms had he caas and domis all,
 That fro the time of King William were fall,
 Thereto he couth endite, and make a thing ;
 Ther couth no wight PINCHIN * at his writing,
 And every statute couth he plaine by rote.—CHAUCER.

BRICK.

In the usual sense of that term. In Dutch bricke, brijcke, in French brique. The ellipsis of the Dutch words bruijcke-aerde; q. e. earth used for manufacturing, as distinguished from that which is unsuited for such purpose; in the same way that in a special import potaarde means earth fit for pottery, and volraarde, fuller's earth. BRICK, as brick earth, would then be in the general meaning of earth fit for the manufacturer, and thus as a peculiar quality of earth. To make brick is to make use of the earth suitable for manufactory, fit to be worked up into form, fit for shaping, and such is brick-earth. A brick of bread, as a smaller loaf, one to be used at one meal, is as the current or usual form in which bread is used, a single using of bread. The French brique de savon, as a bar of soap, is as the current or usual form in which that article is disposed of for general use by the manufacturer. BAT, in BRICK-BAT, is as beet in the sense of a bit, a piece, a portion. Bruijcke [use, a using]. Aerde [earth].

Obs. Brick is also used in a collective or aggregate import; we say, that it is a brick house, or a house of brick, q. e. a house of brick-earth; in the same way as we say a stone-house, or a house of stone; q. e. a house of the material called stone. A house of bricks and a house of stones are not either usual or sound expressions, though perhaps intelligible. We say, to brick up a window, in the import of to fill its space by bricks or brick material. Bricke had also, in Dutch, the meaning of an earthen plate, or trencher, to eat off; but is now obsolete, in both meanings, in that language. That the uy changes, in the present form of the Dutch, into i with us, is seen in the word bruyd, with us bride, in German braut, where brauch is as bruyck. JOHNSON says the word is as the Dutch brick, and thus gives an unexplained tit for tat, which leaves the matter as it was. Menage derives the term from the Latin imbrex, a gutter-tile!

* Lay hold of, touch, find fault with.

A WEDDING.

As the covert expression for an emptying of the necessary or house of office. A term very generally understood, but now seldom used. The ceremony is marked by the customary feast of a shoulder of mutton for the assistants; and the term for it had its rise, I have no doubt, at a period when the word bride bore with us, as it still does in the shape of bruyd with the Dutch, the sense of a collection of decomposed matter [such as forms the contents of a necessary] as well as that of a new-married female. Bruy'd-leider [bride-leader] is still a Dutch phrase both for a nightman or emptier of the house of office, and for a bridegroom, as he who takes away the bride. Bruy'd [bride] is as the participle past of brei-en, brui-en, to break up [to decompose, to deface], and so applicable to the female, whose maiden state is defaced [broke up] by the act of marriage, as well as to the substance used for food, which is defaced and broken up by mastication and digestion into another state or consistence. Our to bruise, to bray [to pound], as well as the French brue [daughter-in-law] all belong to this thema].

FEME COVERT.

A married woman, now used only in legal or technical language. Feme, femme, as woman, has been explained in VOL. I. p. 231-2; and covert is as the French couverte, from couver, to sit upon, to brood, to hatch, to produce, and derived from the Dutch kovēn, kuiven, kuwen, to cover, whence also the French cofre, the Dutch koffer, and our coffer, as that which covers by containing; and also the word cover, as a shelter, or concealment for game or wild animals. Couver [to brood] is to bring the eggs which are brooded or covered into life, to turn them into young fowls, chickens, &c.; and thus to change or alter their state of being [constituency]: a feme covert, is, I suspect, as a female changed from her maiden state into that of the married one, and thus belonging to a different state of her sex. We say to cover a bet, in the sense of to make it a bet, as we do when we put down the equivalent pledge. To cover a mare, is to make it a mother, to change it from a filley, or from an unimpregnated state into a mare with foal; for mare is the French mère, the Italian madre, the Latin mater [mother]. The French couvrir belongs here, and so does their coiffer, as well as many other terms in various languages. Of the source of kuiven—in another page. Our term cove [harbour, shelter] is of this stock.

“ In her failed nothing that I coud gesse,
 One wise nor othir, privie nor aperte,
 A garison she was of godelinesse,
 To make a frontier for a lovir’s herte,
 Right yong and freshe, *a woman full COVERTE, Assurid well of porte, and eke of chere.”

CHAUCER.

BUT.

As the bifarious part of speech, now conjunctive, then disjunctive, has attracted the attention of LOCKE, who imputes various shades of meaning to it, which he specifies by examples of their use;

* See VOL. I. p. 231., at BELDAM, for the etymology of woman.

but comes to no conclusion in regard to the ground of such distant discrepancies in a same word. HORNE TOOKE, in his DIVERSIONS OF PURLEY has employed many quarto pages on the word, to account for what to LOCKE seemed unaccountable, and divides the word into but and bot; the one as grounded in the Anglo-Saxon butan [the Dutch buiten], without, be out; and the other in the Anglo-Saxon botan [the Dutch baeten], to better, of which he extends the sense, into that of to add to; and thus concludes that but is as be out or without, and bot, as superadd, add to; the first constituting the disjunctive, the other the conjunctive part of speech. In so far as he reduces the term to only two meanings and no more, he is right; but in supposing but and bot to be groundedly distinct words, wrong.

“ And seide, *but if he might have grace
To have Custance within a little space,
He na's bot † dale; and chargid them to hie
To shopen for his life some remedy.” CHAUCER.

The term, both in the shape of but and of bot, is evidently a same word; and, I suspect, as the imperative of the Gothic buan, puan [bo-en, bu-en] to put, to place [the ground of the Dutch bouwen, to build]; and in its meaning necessarily including the fact of both taking away and of taking to; for how else can you place? If you take a thing to place it elsewhere, you both take it from, and take or add it to. If you place it from the holding of you hand, you remove it from your hand and add it to another place. And it is this necessarily inherent antagonist import which has infused the antagonist meanings of the term—viz., take from and take to. There is no position in which this word is ever put, where one of these two meanings will not supply the sense required. The antiquated and unclassic Latin puta [suppose, let it be] corresponding with the conjunctive use of but, is as the imperative of putare [to suppose] used adverbially, and probably also grounded in the above puan. But putare has not only the import of to suppose, to put, to take for granted, but also of, to cut off, to take away, to remove, to amputate; though I am not aware that puta, the adverb, ever had both the disjunctive and conjunctive sense of our but or bot; yet the verb to which it belongs certainly had. The Italian butare, to throw away, to eject, to reject, and so to take away, belongs here. I have no doubt the antagonist imports of putare, similar to those of our but, arise from the word being grounded in the same primeval northern verb puan, in the imperative put. At all events, it is clear HORNE TOOKE's double source from a preposition, meaning without, and a verb meaning to better, is sheer fancy; and his assumption of bot and but being different words entirely erroneous. CHAUCER uses them in numerous places indifferently for a same word; a fact easily ascertained by any one who may think it worth the while to consult the works of that author.

* Except.

† Except; he was not, except, as dead.

TONGUE.

Formerly spelt tong by us; the Dutch tong, in a same sense; a word, as observed by BILDERDIJK, full of significance, expressing the regular working of that organ from the tip to the root, when uttered, and thus a practical exemplification of the extent of the faculty allotted to it by nature, and carrying within itself a true ground of its adoption in language, as the name of that which is intended by it. The Greek $\lambda\gamma\omega\tau\tau\omega$ [tongue] does the same, when pronounced, but in a reversed manner, that is, from the root to the tip. We say of a candid ingenuous person, one of a natural, and thus genuine, or sincere disposition, his heart is in [on] his tongue, and imply his tongue expresses his nature [disposition; all that he is]. The word which with the Turks means tongue, with the Persians means heart. Togen, to show, sounds tongue.

TO TOY.

For persons of opposite sexes to play with or handle each other in an amorous manner, to take reciprocal liberties demonstrative of wantonness, to romp together. Stoeyen; q. e. to wanton, to romp, lascivire; whence stough, lascivious, petulant, and stoyestere, a romping wanton girl. The word seems grounded in toy, toot, a toy, a play thing, a jewel [whence togen, to make a play thing of, to dress up, to ornament], and to be as togen prefixed by the privative or undoing s, and thus as to spoil, disorder, undo the one, or thing in question, by what is done by the act intended by the term; to undo the dress or ornaments of the person. With us, in the course of use, the prefix has been dropped. The thema or primordial verb is to-en, in the sense of to show, to place near to, whence togen, tooghen, toonen, to show, to exhibit, to make an appearance. So that to toy is as to disorder or undo the attire by handling [playing, romping together]. In the etymology of this verb JOHNSON has come nearer the mark than usual; although the one he gives will not explain how the term has acquired its meaning.

SHIRT.

[Formerly spelt sherte]; the same word with the Dutch schorte; q. e. a linen garment [frock, apron], grounded in the primordial scho-en, to enclose, to envelope, to cover, to sheath, whence also the Dutch schors, schorse, bark, the French écorce, and the Latin cortex; and also schor, schorre, properly schorring, and our shore, in the phrases sea-shore, river-shore, &c., as that which covers the marginal land of the water. Hence the verb to shirt has the general import of to cover. HORNE TOOKE derives shirt from the Anglo-Saxon sciran [the Dutch scheren] to cut, to sheer; a sense which would apply better to a new-shaved face than to a shirt.

“Where be then, the gay robes, the soft shetes, and the smal shertes.”—CHAUCER.

SHORE.

In the import of prop, stay, lean-to, support; schoor [schoore] in the same sense, and founded in scho-en, in the meaning of to take up, to support, and the root of schooren schorren, to take on the back, and so to carry or support; in the language of the common people sjorren, now used in the sense of to drag or draw, and is properly as the contraction of sjow-eren, a frequentative of sjouwen, to labour hard, to work hard, fatiguer, harmonizing with the French suer.

SLEEP.

Spelt by CHAUCER slepe and sclope; in Dutch slaap, grounded in the thema la as that of laxness [looseness] as well as that of length; whence, in both the above directions of sense, the Latin lingua, the French langue, and Spanish lengua, as well as the terms langage and language; the utterance of the syllable la being, as far as may be, a natural mean of bringing the tongue [lingua] to view, and thus demonstrating the length as well as pliability or laxity of that organ when uttering the term lingua. Limited to the second direction of its import, viz. that of laxity, the thema la, is the ground of the Dutch laf [flaccid, vapid], lappen [to lap, lambere], and by prefacing the word by the reinforcing s [not to be confounded with the privative or negative s, also of the term slap [languid, relaxed, slack], and which word is as la-ig; and no other than the thema la with the dilating terminal ig [our ish] of which the letters f and p, in the largest portion of the Dutch substantives terminating in those letters, are the representative contractions. In this way slaap comes by the import both of the relaxation, as well as of the intermitting stretching which precedes and attends upon sleep. But as sleep implies enduring relaxation from the waking state, that import is introduced into the term slap by doubling the broad a, as is done in the lettering of slaap, as a sign of lengthening or continuance, while the original slap retains its single import of lax [slack] without any reference to duration. Slaap in German becomes schlaf, in Anglo-Saxon slap. In Bas-Breton mori is to sleep. Slapigrava is an Anglo-Saxon term for grave, as the place in which the body dissolves, loosens, falls to pieces. A slap is a blow with the unclenched [relaxed] hand, and belongs here.

“ The riche folke that embrase and knitte all ther herte to tresor of this worlde, shall SLEPE* in the SLEPPINGE of deth, and nothing ne shull they finde in ther hondes of al ther tresor.”—CHAUCER.

“ Now of Kitt Tapster, and of hir paramour,
And the hosteler of the house that sit in Kittis bourt.
When they had ete and dronk right in the same plase,
Kitt began to rendir out all thing as it was:
The wowing of the pardoner, and his cost also,
And how he hopid for to lygg † al nyght wyth hir also;
But thereof he shall be siker as of Godd’ is cope.

* Shall dissolve, or the dissolution consequent to the body from death.

† Chamber, room; and bourt is as the shortened arbour, or harbour, as a place of shelter, and thus an abode to live in for shelter, formerly spelt harbir, harbere, and the same word with Dutch herbergh, hospitium; as will be explained elsewhere.

‡ Lie; liggen [to lie] in Dutch.

And sodeynly kissed her paramour, and seyd, we shal
 SCLOPE*
 Togidir hul by hul, as we have many a nyght,
 And yf he com and make noyse, I prey you dub him knyght." CHAUCER.

A BUNTER.

A common prostitute, a street walker, a female who by choice or distress gains a disgraceful livelihood. Er bij hoon teer; q. e. in that case the means of living are obtained by infamy, in this instance disgrace is that which gives the maintenance. Teer, teere, as the participle present of teeren, to expend, to pay the expense of, to make consumption of, to find the means of living [going on]. Hoon, hone, infamy, dishonour. JOHNSON says bunter is a cant term for a female who lives by picking up rags; but the term is no cant term; and one belonging to our language into which it has come, by a travesty of the original form carrying the true sense, into one of an analogous sound and import. The female who honestly gains her living by collecting rags, is no more entitled to the derogatory appellation of a bunter, than the one to whom providence has supplied other means of living. Bij hoon teer, sounds bunter.

A BOX.

As in the expression a box on the ear. Er boke's; q. e. there is a beating, there is a blow [a thump]. Boke, booke, as the participle present of boken, booken, to beat, to beat linnen, as was formerly done in washing or cleansing it, and the same word with our old to buck, in the import of to wash cloaths by beating, as was then the customary mode. From the travestied form of the noun we have made the verb to box, in the sense of to fight by blows of the fist, by thumping, by thumps.

* Sleep; in sclope may be perceived the broad sound of the original slaap.

“ For the box o’ th’ ear the prince gave you, he gave it like a rude prince.”—SHAKSPEARE.

“ Here is a basket, he may creep in here, and throw foul linen upon him, as if it were going to BUCKING.”—IBID.

TO PLOUGH.

The Dutch ploeghen in the same sense, from ploegh, ploeg, [plough] as ik plege, ik ploge, the imperfect tense of pleghen, pleegen, to perform, to use, to have the custom to do, solere; and the Dutch of former days used the phrases, de land pleegen and de land eerlen, in a same sense, the former implying literally to use the land, as nature intended, for the benefit of man, and the latter to cultivate the land, to give worth [estimation] to the land, to do honour to it, to give additional ornament to it. Eeren, means to cultivate [whence the Latin arare] and also to do honour to, and then the source of the Latin ara [altar] as that by which honour is shown to the deity. and the Latin, like the Dutch, has the verb colere, in the sense of to till [cultivate], and likewise of that of to worship [do honour to]; colere terram, to till the earth, colere deos, to worship the Gods. We say to plough the main, in the import of to navigate the ocean, in the literal sense of to plough, that is, to make use of, and thus as pleegan [ik ploge] as above explained; not, as JOHNSON supposes, in the sense of to divide in furrows, for that would be in a metaphorical direction of sense. The Latins say arare campum, and arare aquor, in a same direction of sense, and not metaphorically, but groundedly in point of sound meaning; arare being as the Dutch eerlen. Pleghen, pleegen [ik ploge, in præterite tensæ] is grounded in pleen, plejen [also plijen, plien], to do, to act, to perform, whence our to play and to ply, the French plier, the Latin plicare, and the Dutch plooij [plait, plea] the root of plooien [to fold, to plait, and thus as to act by the simplest form of doing]; the Dutch pleyten to plead, and the French plaider, belong here, in the import of agere causam, to work the affair, to turn the thing to and fro, to make the most of the case. Hence also our to play. To play the hypocrite, is, to act [perform, do] the part of a hypocrite; and we use the terms actor, performer, player, all in the same import. To ply, is to make use of, to act with. To employ, and the French emploi are evident stocks of this root. To play a trick, is to act, to use, to perform a trick. A play, is a performance, an acting. To play the fiddle, is to use the fiddle. To play the devil, is to act the devil. CHAUCER spells to play, to pley and to plei, and to playe, indifferently.

“ We may wel makin chere and gode visage,
And drivin forth the world, as it may be,
And kepin our estate in private
Till we be dede, or else that we PLAYE
A pilgrimage, or gone out of the way.” CHAUCER.

“ Lo, sir, my name is Idilnesse,
So cleping men me, more and lesse,
Full mightie and full riche am I,
And that of one thing namly,
For I intending to nothing,
But to my joie, and to my PLAYING†,
As for to kembe and tresse me.” IDEM.

— “ So have I ronne
Lo nece mine se ye not how, I swete?
I n'ot whethir ye the more thanke me conne,
Be ye not ware how that false Poliphete
Iron about eftsonis for TO PLEYE‡,
And bringing advocacies newe ? ” IDEM.

“ When Machyn had yherd al Geffrey' is tale,
He rose of banch sodenly, with color wan and pale,
And seyd unto Beryn : Sir, ageyn The
I woll PLEYE no more ; for it wer gret pete
To combir you with actions.” IDEM.

* Perform a pilgrimage.

† Performance, the doing of that which I like to do, and is, we may say, the doing of nothing.

‡ To plead, as the Dutch pleyten above explained, and in the same sense. Agere suam causam.

OBS. Plight is the same word with the Dutch plecht, plegt, duty, obligation, pledge, as will be explained in some other article.

FIELD.

The Dutch veld, veldt, as the participle past of vellen, to fell, to level, to cut down, and to remove inequalities, and field is properly as even, flat, plain place, a place without wood, trees, or buildings.

“ Men maie in secular clothes se
 Flourishin holy religioun,
 Full many a saint in FELDE and town,
 With many a virgine glorious,
 Devote, and full religious
 Han died, that commin clothe aie beren,
 Yet sainctes nethesle thei weren.” CHAUCER.

TWIG.

The Dutch twijg, from twie-en, which is as wie-en, to wave, to turn to and fro; the reinforcing t being prefixed to the root verb. The word is as twie-ig. From wie-en, in the sense of to turn, comes wiel [wheel], which is as ge-wie-el, turner. The German zweig, branch, is formed from zweien, zwa-aien, to sway about, to spread about, and thus analogously to twijg in Dutch. To hop the twig, in the sense of to die, to be off for the other world, is as, toe ho'p tije te wieg; q. e. to go above, takes to quiet; to go to heaven, is as going to one's cradle; in celo quies. Ho, hoo, hoogh, high, above, Op, 'p, up. Tije, as the third person potential mood of tijen, to advance, to proceed. Wieghe, wieg, cradle; a trope for rest.

ONION.

The French oignon, travestied by the Dutch into ajuin; but grounded in wie of that language, now wien in the same sense; and which is a dimi-native of o [eu] as that which is round, in Dutch bol. Oignon, means a bulb, and thus the root of any bulbous plant in general.

A HAND-GALLOP.

On a gallop, at a pace faster than a walk. Er aan d' geloope; q. e. there, on the run [fast pace]; what we see there is on the galop [on the run]. Our gallop is as the French galop in the same sense, travestied from the Dutch geloop [a running] from loopen, to go on by bounds or jumps, to run, whence our to leap. The Dutch have received their own word back in the form of galoppen or galoppeeren [to gallop]. The German makes gelaufe of geloope. To gallop is to run, or go fast, in an indefinite sense.

“The golden sun
GALLOPS the zodiack in his glitt’ring coach.”

SHAKSPERE.

“Whom doth time GALLOP withal?
With a thief to the gallows.”

INCH.

“He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey’s end, than he that runs after every one he meets, though he GALLOP all day full speed.”—LOCKE.

OBS. Aspirate aan [on] and aan d', sounds hand. D', de, our particle the.

A SAUCE-BOX.

A forward talkative pert person, one who is never at a loss for a sharp retort to what has been said to him by another. Er saē 's bije oock's; q. e. there is talk, and the bee also [besides]; you will find not only talk [saws] enough, but a sting with them; you will not only have words but stinging ones into the bargain. Saē, as the abbreviation of saeghe, zaage, whence our saw, in the sense of a sentence, saying, maxim. The word is grounded in segghen, zeggen [to say]. Bie, bije, bee, as a stinging insect. Oock, also, besides. 'S, is, is.

" His weapons holy saws of sacred writ." SHAKSPEARE.

" The foolish old poet says that the souls of some women are made of sea-water: this has encouraged my SAUCEBOX to be witty upon me."—ADDISON.

A CHATTER-BOX.

One with a flux of words, an obstreperous talker, an incessant gabbler. Er schie jet ter bij oock's; q. e. there you are sure to have something more [something in addition]; in him you will always find he has something more to say; you may be sure, with him, never to have the last word. Schie, schielyck, soon, quickly, instantly. Jet, something. Ter bij oocks; also ready, at hand. To chatter, in the direct sense of that verb, is the frequentative form of to chat; and to chat is, I suspect, the old Dutch quetten, quaeden [to speak, to say, to talk [whence our obsolete quoth]] the frequentative of which is quetteren, kwetteren [to chatter]; to which source belongs also the Anglo-Saxon cwethan, cwothan, in the same sense as quetten above explained. Schie jet ter sounds chatter. Bij, by, by, near, at hand; ter, to, in addition, into the bargain.

A BRIBE.

Er by raube; q. e. thereby a fraud [theft]; by what is done a prey [plunder] has been made; by that a knavish [roguish] act is done. Raube, as the participle present of the Gothic rauban, the German rauben, to rob, to thieve, to defraud, and the same word with the Dutch rooven, roofen, in the like sense; which last term is grounded in rouw [rough], and is thus as rouwen, rowen, rooven, to unroughen, to make smooth, to take off, to shave, to plane, to rasp ; and to rob is to take away, to make bare, to strip, in the same form of language as we say to peel, for to unpeel, &c. &c. Rijven, wrijven, and the German reiben, and our to rub, are one word ; and evidently connected with rooven, to take away, to remove. To bribe has been formed from the noun, which is the travesty of a former phrase or sentence resounding into the shape of a single word. Bribery is as the German rauberij, in Dutch rooverije ; q. e. robbery, villainy, larceny, theft [corrupt, wicked act], a fraudulent transaction. JOHNSON fetches the term out of the French bribe, a now little-used popular term for piece of bread, lunch of bread, in the plural, scraps and fragments reserved by the servants of a household to give to beggars ; and in the expression des bribes de Latin, it means scraps, bits, stolen pieces ; a word evidently connected with the Spanish briba, sham-begging, fraudulent begging, and bribar, to play the beggar or vagabond by way of trade ; and also with the Italian birba, a rogue, a vagabond. But I do not see how our bribe, and to bribe, in the sense they are used in with us, can come out of either the French or Spanish words, either in sound or sense ; but can more easily conceive the French term to be grounded in bij raube, as above explained. Our to bereave, formerly to reve, is evidently of this stock.

" There was a law made by the Romans against the BRIBERY and extortions of the Governours of Provinces : before, says Cicero, the Governours did BRIBE and extort as much as was sufficient for themselves ; but now they BRIBE and extort as much as may be enough not only for themselves, but for Judges, Jurors, and Magistrates." —BACON.

To give a bribe, is to give that which deprives of his right the one to whom it duly belongs, to take a bribe, is to participate in playing the thief or robber.

OBS.—In all cases where the verb is used in a contrary sense to that which its form implies, as in to

peel, when we really mean to unpeel, to shell for to unshell, to rind for to unrind, to head for to behead, &c. &c., it is, I have always found, so used only where the word can have no other import without making nonsense, and thus by a logical reductio ad absurdum. To peel an orange cannot mean to put a peel to it, to head a man can never mean to put a head on him, &c. &c.

The Dutch roeve, raeve, roef, rove, the French rave, the Latin rapum in the sense of radish, turnip-root, as well as rooven and rapere, to ravish, and raven, as the bird which makes a rough [hoarse] croaking noise, are all of this same stock. Radish or turnip is as that which is carried off as the prize or prey of its green top or foliage.

WEEK.

In Dutch, week, weke, the Gothic wiko, turn, a turn, and thus, series, order, as by turns, one turn of time regularly succeeding the other; regulated series of turns of periods. The word is groundedly as we-ig, transient, passing quickly over, and thus as quickly following periods [turns] of time; and connected with the Latin vices, invicem, &c. CHAUCER spells the word wike, which is still nearer to the original weke.

“ Creseide, which all these thingis sey,
To tell in shorte, her likid al ifere,
His person, his array, his loke, his chere,
His godeley manir, and his gentilnesse,
So well, that nevir sithe that she was borne,
Ne haddin she suche routh of his distresse;
And howe so she has hard ben here beforne,
To God hope I, she hath now caught a thorne,—
She shal nat pul it out this nexte WIKE,
Ged wende her mo such thornis on to pike.”

CHAUCER.

PEARL.

Paarl, parel, paarle, as the French perle, but originating in the Dutch peereel, i. e. peerachtig; q. e. pear-shaped, shaped like a pear.

"The true shape of the pearl is a perfect round, but some of a considerable size are of the shape of a pear, and serve as ear-rings."—HILL.

NEST.

The Dutch nest, properly genest; q. e. binding, interweaving, knitting, bandage, from the primordial ne-en, to knit, to bind together. Hence the Latin nere, [to knit, to sew].

SACK.

As the sweet wine so greatly in favour with our forefathers, is the ellipsis of the Dutch sak-wijn, sek-wijn, and means doorgesegen wijn; q. e. wine that has been strained through a cloth bag made for that purpose. In former days all the best wines of Spain were boiled and then strained. Sijghen, sacken, is to sink down or through, to pass down, to strain through.

WATER.

The Dutch waeter, water, and grounded in wa-en [to flow] the same word with a-en, the aspirate w being prefixed. A, ae, ahe, is a primitive term for water; in Anglo Saxon ea, in Islandick a and aa, in Franco-teutonick aha, in Danish aa, in Swedish ā, in Persian aw, in Latin aqua, in Spanish agua, in French eau, formerly eause, which is strictly awe for aē, by sinking the aspirate w. A, pronounced broadly, as it was formerly by us and now is in other languages, affords the most natural and perceptible sign of the continuous effusion of the breath and concomitant spread of the organs by which sound is emitted of any of the vowels, and is thus as the most natural token of flowing and spreading that can be exhibited by the means given us for the mutual communication of our ideas and intentions. The above a, by compressing the utterance, becomes e, formerly pronounced by us as we now do a in most words, and as in other languages it still is, and then represents effusion and spread in a more subdued and equable form. I, pronounced formerly by us, as we now do the e in general, and is still done by the French and Italians, is the analogous representative of tenuity, sharpness, fineness; o, by utterance, gives the sense of fulness and inflation; u that of depression or compression, especially when succeeding the o. The Latin and Greek aēr, ἀηρ, aspōr, and our air, evidently belong to the primordial a, in the view of indefinite fluidity.

A BILL.

As in the phrases, bill in parliament, bill of costs, bill in chancery, bill of fare, bill of mortality, &c. Er bevel; q. e. there an order, a recommendation, an announcing, a making known, an authority, a precept, a delegation, a commission; the context always specifying, of course, the act or thing to be done, recommended, ordered, announced. A bill of fare, is the announcement of the fare; a bill of mortality, the regulated making public [announcing] of deaths; a bill in parliament, is the recommending that which is to be done in parliament; a tailor's bill, is the notice from the tailor to be paid that which is stated to be owing him, and so on. The word has been derived by some from the modern Latin bulla [in modern Greek βούλη, or βούλω] brief, official order, and the source of the French billist, Italian viglietto, and our billet, as its diminutive forms. But is not the modern bulla, the Dutch bevel with a latinely ferminized termination? The Dutch henvel and our hill are the same word; so are the French bille, our ball and bowl, the Latin pila, and the Dutch bol. The Dutch euvel and our evil and ill are a same word. But there is no end to analogous instances of dialectual transformations in regard to letter.

“ Her BYL* was made complaining in her gise,
 That of her joye, her comfort, and gladnesse,
 Was no suretie, for in no manir wise
 She said therein no point of stablenessse,
 Now yl, now wile, out of all sikirnese,
 Ful humbly desiring of her high grace
 Some to shewe her remedy in this case.” CHAUCER.

“ Her felawe made her BILL†, and thus she said,
 In plaining wise, &c.” IDEM.

“ And with his blode he wrote that blisfull BILL‡
 Upon the crosse as general acquaunce
 To every penitent in full cryaunce.” IDEM.

“ In her presence we kneled downe everychome Presenting our BYLLIS§.” IDEM.

“ Tell me her name [quoth I] of Gentilnesse?
 By my gode sothe [quoth she] Avisenesse.
 That name [quoth I] for her is passing gode,
 For every BYL and schedule she must se.” IDEM.

“ Go little BILL||, go forth and hie The fast,
 Recommende me and excuse me as you can.” IDEM.

WEDLOCK.

[Marriage] I take to be as the Dutch, wedloke ;
 q. e. the pledge covered, the engagement concluded,
 the promise fulfilled [locked, made fast]. Wed, pledge, pawn, deposit, and formerly in use with us in the same sense, but since spelt bet, as a pledge given by word or stake. Luycken, loken, to shut, to cover, to include, and so to conclude or close ;
 and we say he covered the bet, and mean, he made it a bet, he closed his bargain, that is, he made it a bargain. From this verb we have our to lock.
Loke, is as the participle present, and thus a confirming or making fast or secure. The Latin vadare, to pawn or pledge, to give security, is the same word with wedden ; here also belong vas, vadis, and

* Petition, desire, prayer. † Petition.

‡ Recommendation, desire. § Petitions, prayers.

|| Refers to a sonnet written in the form of petition to his mistress.

the French gage as pledge, through the modernized Latin vadium. To wed, is as wedden; q. e. to give for a security, and thus to secure the engagement, as is done by those who marry, a previous engagement being necessarily implied; and wedding, as marrying, is no other than the participle present of this wedden, as the giving the pledge, the gage; of which the giving the ring is the type; to put it on the finger is the outward sign of the engagement offered and accepted, and so confirmed. The Dutch have the expression om wed; q. e. for the pledge or bet, that which is contended for, strove for to be gained, as one striving against another; whence the subsequently formed wedden in the import of to strive for the pledge, to contend for the stake or deposit. Lock, in wedlock, has nothing to do with the Anglo-Saxon term for gift as JOHNSON supposes. CHAUCER uses wed, wedde, for pawn, pledge.

—“Be not wrothe, but let us laugh and playe; Ye shall my jolly body have to WEDDE*.”

CHAUCER.

WILL.

Choice, desire. In Dutch wille, wil, and the same word with wel [bene] now only used as an adverb; whence our well in the same sense; and is as that which accords with our desire [inclination]; but does not so much express that which is good, as that which coincides with our wish, that by which we are satisfied, that which is as we desire it should be. The ancient Dutch said wale, which is the same word with the German wahl, choice. Walen, is to turn, to veer, to turn towards, whence the German wählen, to chuse, to elect; and wil is as the bending [turning, inclining] of the mind or soul to the object in question. Wellust, pleasure, luxury, is as willust, that is, willekeur, the choice of the desire or will ; and as we say the will and pleasure ; ter wellust van de baren, is at the will and pleasure [at the mercy] of the waves. Is not voluptas the Latinized wellust? And velle [the infinitive of volo], the Dutch willen, wellen? We said formerly woll for will and well ; and also had to wale, to wail, as the above German wählen, to choose, from the Dutch walen, in the sense of to turn, and thus to turn the mind towards ; we have now the phrase of choice wine for favourite wine.

* For a pawn, pledge, stake, security.

“ This lepir loge take for thy godeley houre,
And for thy bed take now a bouache of stre,
For WAILED* wine and metis thou had tho,
Take moulid bred, pirate, and sidir soure.”

CHAUCER.

OBS. Lust, lost, pleasure, desire, inclination, delight, appetite, ~~concupiscence~~, lewdness ; and with which our word lust is the same, as well as our antiquated list in the sense of pleasure. From the thema lo-en, to burn, to be on fire, to be in a blaze, to wax warm. To lust, and to list were verbs formerly used by us in the sense of to will, to desire, to wish ardently, to burn for. The list in the adjective listless [without inclination, indifferent, will-less] is the same word as the Dutch lust above explained. So that wellust, is, as we say, will and pleasure.

“ Ye maie do with me what ye will
Or save or spill †, and also slo ;
Fro you in no wise maie I go,
My life, my death, is in your hondes
I maie not last out of your bonde,
Plaine at your LISTE‡ I yelde me,
Hoping in hert, that sometime ye
Comforte and ese shal to me sende.” CHAUCER.

“ The angel of God hath me the trouth taught
Whiche thou shalt sein, and thou wilt remey
The idoies, and be cleene, or else naught.

* Choice.

† Pleasure.

‡ Destroy ; spillen, to waste, to consume.

Of the miracles of these crounis twey
 St. Ambrose in his preface *LUST to sey,
 Full solempnely this noble doctour dere
 Commendith it, &c."

CHAUCER.

Hence our old substantives lustichedde, in Dutch lustigheid [pleasing disposition], amenity of manner, and lustinesse [pleasure, amusement].

" And shortly, dere herte, and all my knight,
 Beth glad and drawith you to LUSTINESSE†,
 And I shall truly, with all my full might,
 Your bitter tournin all to swetinesse,
 If I be she, that maie do you gladnesse,
 For every wo ye shall recover blisse,
 And him in armis toke, and gan him kisse." IDEM.

" This Hercules hath this Jason so preised,
 That to the sunne he hath him up reised ;
 That halfe so true a man there n'as of love
 Undir the cope of Heven that is above ;
 And he was wise, hardie, secrete, and riche,
 Of these three pointis, there n'as none him liche,
 Of fredome passid he, and LUSTIHDDE‡
 All tho that livin, and all tho ben dedde,
 Thereto so grete a gentillman was he." IDEM.

Formerly, we had also the adjective lustie, lusty, in the sense of lustful, amorous, pleasurable, gay, joyful, the same word with the Dutch lustigh, in a same sense; but which has become obsolete with us in that meaning, and our more modern lusty, in the sense of stout, corpulent, fat, large, confounded with it in point of both meaning and source. For our lusty, in this last meaning has, in truth, nothing to do with the Dutch lustigh, lostigh, the source of our older lustie; and is the travesty of the Dutch lastigh, heavy, weighty, ponderous, burthensome, deriving from last, burthen, weight. In attempting to refer these dissimilar meanings of

* Please, takes pleasure in.

† Amusement, pleasure, gaiety,

‡ Amenity of deportment [manner].

a same spelt word to a common source, our etymologists have been misled by form of spelling, and have lost sight of the trusty clue of sound sense.

“ I am mine owne woman well at ese :
 I thank it God, as aftir mine estate,
 Right yong, and stond untied in LUSTIE less*
 Withoutin jelousie, and soche debate,
 Shall no husbonde saine unto me checke mate.”

CHAUCER.

“ If LUSTY † love shall go in quest of beauty,
 Where shall he find it fairer than in Blanch ?”

SHAKSPEARE.

“ Where there is so great a prevention of the ordinary time, it is the LUSTINESS § of the child ; but when it is less, it is some indisposition of the mother.”

BACON.

“ Cappadocian slaves were famous for their LUSTINESS §, and being in good liking, were set up in stall to shew the good habit of their body, and made to play tricks before the buyers to shew their activity and strength.”

DRYDEN’S PERSIUS.

BIRTH.

In all the senses in which we use that word. Bearte ; q. e. turn, course, event, incident, a successive turn, a stated event, that which falls to us as the allotted course or share in the regulation of events. To give birth to a child, is to afford a child the course allotted to him in the order of things ; to give it the destined condition in the nature of things. A birth, as in the phrase, he has got a good birth, and meaning he has got a good place or position in life, is simply as a good lot or turn has befallen him, taken place in regard to him among the events of life. A birth in a ship, is as the place destined for the accommodation of any one ; that which comes to the share of the person

* Pleasurable tie, hold of concupiscence, amorous attachment.

† Wanton.

‡ Largeness, bigness, size.

§ Size, stoutness.

in question, and might have been taken by or allotted to any other, and means no more than a position taken or allotted. Beurte, ghebeurte, gheborte, turn, contingency, accident, destined share, that which belongs to the varying and different state of things which compose a concurrent or regulated system; and hence, I suspect, the old Dutch boort, boerte, and the present geboorte, in the sense of birth. BILDERDIJK, however, gives a different source to the term geboorte, and makes it a verbal noun of geboren [born], the past participle of baeren, gebaeren, to bring forth; or possibly as formed from geboren itself. From this baren, baeren, we have evidently our old term bairn [child], and the Latin it's parere, parire, in the sense of to bring forth. So that in my view BIRTH, would be the past participle of gebeuren, beuren, to happen, and in BILDERDIJK's of gebaren, baren, to bring forth, to produce, to display, to bring into view. In both cases the sense must be supplied by that which either the happening or else that which is brought forth, refers to when the word is used. But if BILDERDIJK is right, how is the term in his sense of it to be brought to bear upon birth as the place, position, situation in life of a person, in a relation to the place falling to him by way of room or abode in a ship? For that our term birth is the same word in all these relations, and from a same source, is not to be disputed. Probably, if duly and deeply traced, gebeuren and gebaren may resolve into an identical thema. The one is to produce, the other to happen, and an event or happening, is a production, a bringing forth, a bringing to view or light.

"The seamen call a due or proper distance between ships lying at an anchor, or under sail, a BIRTH. Also the proper place aboard for the mess to put their chests, &c., is called the BIRTH of that mess. Also a convenient place to moor a ship in is called a BIRTH."—HARRIS.

A CATERPILLAR.

Er gut ter pelle er; q. e. there a gut [gate, outlet] to peeling; in this we see a door to the carrying off that which it peels away; that is, a gut for the purpose of passing the peel or skin of the leaves or plants it is formed to feed on. And what is the caterpillar in appearance but a gut, or channel, to the vegetable pellicle it devours? Gat, a gate, a passage, whence our term gut, as has been before explained. Pelle, as the participle present of pellen, to peel, to skin, to decorticate. MINSHEW and SKINNER combine the term of the French words chatte peluse, which they say is a weasel; and might as well have said a whale! JOHNSON thinks it must be as our word cates [dainties] and the French piller [to plunder], and thus by the help of two languages makes a sort of alderman of this raw-leaf-eating reptile.

STINGY.

Unbenevolent, unwilling to give, cold-hearted, narrowly tempered. Er's t'inge je; q. e. in that one [there] it is always too confined, with him it is ever in a too narrow state of mind, for ever a narrow-minded feeling; in whatever proceeds from him we can perceive him to be near [narrow-minded, close-fisted]. And we use the terms near and narrow, in the sense of covetous, avaricious, and thus in the sense of stingy, but through another form of word. Enghe, eng, inghe, narrow, confined. 'S, is, is. 'T', te, too, too much. Je, ever. Er's t'inge je, sounds stingy. JOHNSON offers neither source nor rationale for the term, but, proprietate inscitid incensus denounces it for "a low cant word," though he annexes a true and sound instance of its use in our language.

"A STINGY narrow-hearted fellow that had a deal of choice fruit, had not the heart to touch it till it began to be rotten."
—L'ESTRANGE.

A NIGGARD.

[Formerly spelt nigarde] ; mean-spirited, low-minded ; endowed by nature with a soul below the general standard allotted to the kind he belongs to ; intellectually sordid ; one that begrudges all he is obliged to do or employ himself in. Er nijghe aerd ; q. e. in this case nature has declined ; this is an instance where nature [for purposes to us unseen] has adopted a standard of soul below the general mark ; here we have an instance where nature presents a model of the lower range of her works ; this one belongs to the descending scale of nature instead of its ascending one, that in which stand the low-minded as contrasted with the high-minded ; one better suited to the baser offices of existence than to the higher. Nijghe the participle present of nijghen, neyghen, to incline, to decline, to bend down, to sink down ; and thus a sinking down ; or it may be as the third person of the potential mood of that verb, and thus sinks down, falls below ; the sense comes to the same in both cases. Aerd, nature, the regulated system of things. A niggard belongs to a low degree of the same scale of nature, of which a blackguard is as zero [see that term in VOL. I. p. 125] or the point below which she never descends ; for black is as total extinction of light and so nothing left to see by. From nigarde, we had the old term nigardie, now niggardliness ; in the sense of natural sordidness, intellectual baseness.

“ A wife ne should not say of her husbonde
 But all honour, as I can undirstonde,
 Save unto you, thus much stellin shall,
 As help me God, he is not worthe at all,
 In no degree, the value of a flie ;
 But yet me grevith most his NIGARDIE. ” CHAUCER.

A TROLLOP.

A slovenly female, one negligent in her dress. Er toye 'r al op ; q. e. dressing there all over [all up]; careful attire at an end; all which respects dress entirely neglected; an end of all attention to proper attire of the person. Toye, the participle present of toyen, to ornament, to attire, to adorn, to dress, to decorate. Al op, all over, all up, all at an end. 'R, er, there, in that instance the one in question Toije 'r al op, sounds trollop.

FLAME.

In the usual sense; the Dutch vlamme, vlam, the contraction of vla-ing, the participle present of vla-en, in the sense of to vacillate, to vibrate, to fly about, to beat about, to wave to and fro as a flame in its ascent. A blaze is grounded in bla-en [blazen] to blow, to blast; we say, a roaring fire, and the wind roars, in the import of the noise made by each.

SHIP.

The Dutch schip; grounded in scheppen, to take in, to receive, to hold; whence also their schep, schap, a safe, a place to hold or keep things. In some of the old Dutch writings broedschip means a bread basket used at meals or festivals, as that which holds [the holding] of the bread.

TO PRINT.

Printen; q. e. to press, to stamp, to impress, to indent, to coin, to imprint; grounded on the thema pri, whence priem, a dagger [also an awl] as the contraction of pri-ing, penetrating, piercing; as well as prick, a thorn, a point. The Dutch term for to print, in the sense of to print a book, &c. is drukken [drukken], literally, to press, but used as the ellipsis of drucke-printen, and thus, as it were, to mark or indent by pressure of edge or point. And, in fact, the completion of the sense in priem and prik, as objects of point, edge, or sharpness, is in pressure, for without pressure, sharpness and point are ineffective qualities. In this direction of sense we say the press, for the produce of the printing-house in general, and letter-press for that which is printed, as contra-distinguishing it from that which is written. The Latin premere [pressi, pressus], to press, and the French imprimer, to print, clearly belong here; but JOHNSON is wrong in supposing our to print to originate in the French term. He saw the print of a man's foot, and, he saw the impression of a man's foot, are equivalent expressions. The ink with which the edges of the printer's letters or tools are smeared, would not make the due mark without pressure. The Italian for to print is stampare, i.e. to stamp, to press.

SUDDEN.

The French soudain, in the same import; but not, as MENAGE supposes, from the Latin subitanus; but as the travesty of the Dutch so-gedaen, sodaen, then done, so done, done at once, done thus, no sooner said than done. So, thus, so. Daan, gedaen, done, the past participle of doen, to do.

TO TIRE.

To weary, to fatigue; also to become weary or fatigued. Formed, I have no doubt, from the Dutch teeren [teren]; q. e. to consume, to wear away or out, to fall off, to fall away; whence the French tarir, in the same sense. To tire a horse, is to wear away [consume] his power [activity, strength]. To be tired of any thing, is, to be worn out [consumed] by the use of it; to have the taste, feeling, liking for it, worn away [consumed]. Tired with work, is worn out [consumed] by work. Tired of life, is worn out by the effect [the going on] of life, the taste for life worn out. CHAUCER uses the word tirin, in the import of consume, eat away, destroy, feed upon, which is the same Dutch teeren, teren, in the sense to devour, feed upon, to tear, and so to consume, used in the third person plural of its present tense, and having, in fact, the same sound, though differently lettered. JOHNSON and BAILEY tell us to tire is the A. S. tirian; but whence tirian, except from teeren, teren, of the Dutch? Teeren, teren, tirian, to tire, and to tear, are one verb, in the sense of to consume, wear away, waste.

“ I grauntin well that thou endurist wo
 As sharpe as doth he Tityus in hell,
 Whose stomake foulis TIRIN evir mo,
 That heightin* vulturis, as bokis tell ;
 But I may not endurin that thou dwell
 In so unskilful an opinion,
 That of this wo n's no curacion.”

CHAUCER.

STING.

In the phrases the sting of the bee, the stinging of nettles, the sting of conscience, &c. Grounded in the Dutch primordial ste-en, to puncture, to thrust, to prick [whence stippen, to make a point or stop, as we do by the end of something pointed]; and is the participle present ste-ing; q. e. thrusting, puncturing, pricking. The sting of the bee, is a puncturing or thrusting of the bee. The sting of conscience, is the pricking of the conscience. From the noun we have made our verb to sting.

STRICKEN.

As in the phrase stricken in years, that is, advanced in years [of advanced age], is the participle past of the Dutch strijcken, in the sense of to go on, to advance, to stretch on, to extend. Strijken nae Italien, is to go on, stretch on, advance on, to Italy. A new thought strikes me, is, a new thought advances into me [comes into me]. He struck into the right path, is, he advanced [went on], in the right path. In the phrases, to strike the flag, to strike sail, to strike work, the verb to strike is, as the Dutch strijcken, in the import of to lower, relax, to let down, to abate, to lay aside, to stretch along. Strijcken het seyl, is to lower the sail; de vlag strijcken, is to strike or lower the flag; den brock strijcken, is to let down the breeches; voor jemand strijken, is, to knock under, to give up or submit to another. But strijcken is, in the ground, a modification of strecken, whence our to stretch, and to stretch is to extend, to go on either in length or breadth, to advance in dimension, to relax in respect of dimension, to give way in one direction or the other indefinitely. To strike a blow, is, to put forth a blow, to advance that which makes the blow to that which receives it, as we do when we strike in this sense. To strike dead, is, to stretch the one in question [extend, lay along] dead; the lightning struck him dead, is, the lightning stretched him dead, laid him dead. The thema is stri-en, stre-en, in the import of to extend, to strain, to go on, whence also our to strive, in the sense of to extend the force or means of either body or mind, to reach or attain the point in question, and our term straight.

* Are called; the Dutch heeten.

“ And with that word right anone,
Thei gan to STRAKE* for the, all was done
For that time the hart-huntyng.”

THE DREME OF CHAUCER.

“ And these wordes said, she straight† on length and rested awhile.”—CHAUCER.

“ Hie labour and full grete apparelling
Was at the servise ‡, and the fire-making,
That with his grene top the hevin wrought §,
And twenty fathom of brede|| armsis STRAUGHT ¶
This to seyne, the boughis were so brode.” IDEM.

* To relax [give up] directly, to cease immediately; whence the Italian straccare, to tire, to give over.

† Stretched, laid herself at full length, stretched out.

‡ Solemn function, great festival.

§ Touched, as the Dutch geraeckt, in the same sense.

|| Broad. ¶ Straight, stretched out.

"Her tresses yelowe, and long STRAUGHTEN"^{*} Unto her heles doun they raughten †." IDEM.

A SCRAPE.

As a fool's difficulty, mischief in consequence of improvidence [perverseness, folly], perplexity from unguarded conduct, a fool's dilemma. Er's keye reē'p; q. e. there is the fool already done for; there it is already over with the blockhead; all chance in this affair is over with the madcap. JOHNSON says the term is "a low one;" but it is no otherwise low than as fraught with a playful reproach for the folly of the person in regard to whom it is used, and therefore only suited to familiar conversation, and respecting some little-to-be-commiserated wrong-headed bungler. It will not do for solemn or formal occasions, nor for truly pitiable catastrophes. The POPE, when ordered to Paris by BUONAPARTE, might appropriately be said to be in a scrape, to have gotten himself into a scrape, or foolish dilemma. CHARLES the TENTH of France, when crossing to England, as the consequence of his wrong-headedness, might have said, "what a scrape I am in." But in the relation to LOUIS XVI., or CHARLES I., when led to the scaffold, the term would have been revolting and ill-placed; for though their falls were caused by their follies and misconduct, yet the consequence being death, was of a nature to preclude all levity in any humane breast in relation to the ensuing catastrophe. Keye, fool, madman. Reede, ready, already. 'P, op, up, over, finished. Er's, er is, there is. Er's keye 'r reē'p, sounds a scrape.

A MILKSOP.

A timid weak-minded person, groundedly, however, an apprehensive, anxious person; one who for ever foresees and looks forward to the worst that can possibly come from every event about to take place ; one who never takes any other than the blackest view of every thing ; a nervous or hypochondriacal person. Er m' elck sie op ; q. e. there is the one who looks with mistrust every moment of his existence ; there the one who looks with anxiety at whatever passes before him ; there is one who has no expectation of any good being the result of any thing that takes place ; and thus a gloomy, apprehensive, anxious-minded person ; one only suited to be a torment to himself and those who have any regard for him. Er, there. M', meē, mede, with, at. Elck, any thing, each thing, every thing. Sien op, opsien, to suspect, to regard with dread or suspicion, to watch anxiously, to be apprehensive of, to suspect. The original phrase sounds milk sop. JOHNSON tells you, the word is as milk and sop, and so as whiteness and softness together. At that rate a blackamoor could never be a true milk sop. But what reference, in the name of common sense, can those two words have to any state of the human mind ? How is a thing sopped in milk a better type of softness than one sopped in water would be ?

* Stretched lengthways, extended along.

† Reached; as the Dutch raeckten.

A DAWDLE.

A slow, idle, loitering person ; a listless inactive being. Er daē ijdel ; q. e. in that one appears the idle person ; in the one there we see the lazy being ; there dawns the slothful vacant person ; there the loitering one presents himself in person to us. Daē, daghe, the third person of the present tense, potential mood, of daghen, to dawn, to begin to appear [to show itself], to commence its appearance, lucescere. Ijdel, idle, lazy, inactive, useless, helpless, frivolous, trifling. The original phrase sounds a dawdle ; to dawdle, has been formed from the noun into which that phrase has resounded. JOHNSON has not given the word a place in his Dictionary ; and yet, is there a single English male or female by whom this word has not been uttered, at one time or other, in the sense above given ? A dawdling person, is a slow, listless, loitering person.

A DOWDY.

An overshort person, one of disproportionate stature. Er d' houw die ; q. e. this is the lopping ; what is before you is a mere slice, a part for the whole, in the same way as we say, he is only a bit of man, and mean an undersized person. The phrase resounds into a dowdy ; and is as the prosopopoeia of some one who points out the object in view to his neighbour or bystander. The term, when applied in relation to dress or manner, has merely its import as regards the ill-assorted appearance of dress or manner, when exhibited in an undersized person ; and thus as having an ungainly, awkward, unseemly effect. JOHNSON offers no etymology for the word ; but, by the vouchers he gives, has clearly perceived its true import. The term has no reference to one sex more than the other, though generally applied to the female as the one with whom appearance, both of person and dress, is an object more attended to than with the male. De, the. Houw, houwe, hauwe, cut, cutting, section, slice, portion taken off. Die, this one, this person.

“ Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen-wench ; Dido a dowdy ; Cleopatra, a gipsy ; Helen and Hero, slidings and harlots.”—SHAKSPEARE.

“ And therefore 'tis no wonder if we see
They doat on dowdies and deformity.” DRYDEN.
“ No housewifery the dowdy creature knew ;
To sum up all the tongue confess'd the shrew.” GAY.

A DOXY.

A well favoured female with a bold appearance, a handsome forward woman ; one conscious of her allurements, but somewhat devoid of the due feminine reserve; in Italian una donna di partito; una buona roba. Er d' hoeck sie; q. e. see there the hook; behold the hook concealed by the bait, take care of the baited snare there. Implying, the alluring beauty which presents itself to you conceals a snare which is to catch and entangle you if you are deceived and enticed by its appearance; that the female in question is evidently one of those who purpose to make a base use of their charms when they have captivated their dupe by them. D' hoeck, de hoeck, the hook. Sie, the imperative of sien, to see, to behold, to perceive. Er d' hoeck sie, sounds a doxy. JOHNSON gives no etymology for the term, but says, it means a whore; but a whore may be old and ugly, but who ever heard of an ugly old doxy?

“ When daffodils begin to *pure,
With heigh ! the doxy over the dale.”

SHAKESPEARE.

A WOOL GATHERING.

As in the expression, your wits are gone a wool-gathering, and in the sense of, you are quite lost in thought, absent in regard to what is passing before you, in a maze or confused state of mind. Er woele gae er in; q. e. there a state of tumult is in action; confusion [embarrassment, agitation, disorder] goes on there. Woele as the participle present of woelen, to roll about, to tumble from one position to the other, to be in a state of agitation [disordered action]; to revolve backwards and forwards without apparent cause. Gaen, to go on, to proceed; gae, the third person potential mood. Er, there. Of course, in reference to mental agitation in the person the phrase is applied to.

* To peer, to peep out; spelt by CHAUCER to pyre, and grounded in the Dutch pier, a worm, and to peer is to play the worm, to peer or peer as that does out of the earth.

A HODMANDOD.

A provincial term for a snail. Er hoed m' aen d' oed; q. e. there the naked one with a hood on it, there is the naked one with the shell [shelter, hood, cover] along with it; and the distinguishing mark of the snail, from the uncovered and naked slug, is this hood, cap, or shelter. Hoed, hood, hat, cover. M' aen, meē aen, mede aen, along with, together with. D' oed, de oed, de ood, the naked one, the one destitute of any covering, the one without the hood; and the phrase sounds as hodmandod. And dodman, which is another form of the same name for a snail, is, as d' hoed m' aen; q. e. with the hood on; the slug with the hood or shelter on his back. JOHNSON gives no etymology for the word, but explains it to be a fish; deceived, probably, by the following passage in BACON.

"Those that cast their shell are the lobster, the crab, the craw-fish, and the HODMANDOD or dodmin."—BACON.

— "As quiet and well,
And as snug as a HODMANDOD rides in his shell."

ANSTREY.—Bath Guide.

A TOAD IN THE HOLE.

A homely name for a homely dish or pudding made of pieces of meat laid in a deep pan, over which batter is poured till the vacancy is filled to the top. Er toe wat inne de hol; q. e. something thereto, fills up the hollow; by the addition to what has been already laid in, the vacant space is filled up. And is thus a sort of diagnosis for this kind of pudding, as well as a general receipt for making it, the substances, of which it may consist, have nothing to do in the import of the original phrase. Er toe, thereto. Wat, something substantial. Innen, to put in, fill in. Hol, hollow, hole, vacancy, cavity, empty space. The sounds of t and d reciprocate, and toe-wat sounds toad; for which term see VOL. I. p. 69. l. 11. of this Essay.

A JAKES.

That for which we now use the term water-closet; but formerly a deep hole in the ground with or without a stake across. Er j'ack's [j'eeck's]; q. e. in that place there is always an offensive sediment; a place for offensive matter; there is where corruption is deposited; a depot of pungently smelling stuff, and, I suspect, no unapt appellation for such receptacle in former days; and even in these days justly descriptive of such places in most parts of the continent. Ack, eck, eeck, corrupt matter, dregs [sediment] from sound matter; filth [refuse] matter, disgusting substance. The Greek χωρ, sanguineous matter, evidently belongs here; and so does eecke, eycke [oak], as the tree with uneatable disgusting fruit, as opposed to the hazel or nut with the eatable fruit, already explained. J', je, always, even. 'S, is, is. Ackel, eckel, nausea, disgust, sickening feel, is of this stock evidently; as well as akelig, horrible. JOHNSON says, the word is of uncertain etymology.

“I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the walls of JAKES with him.”—SHAKESPEARE.

“Their sordid avarice rakes
In excrements, and hires the very JAKES.” DRYDEN.

“Some have fished the very JAKES for papers left there by men of wit.”—SWIFT.

TO CUDDLE.

To cover, and so to take close to, to apply near to, to bring to touch, as the hen does her brood and the mother her child, by pressing to the breast; and as lovers do to each other. Tuck hued el; q. e. nature tells the one to take care of the other; instinct says, guard this one; natural feeling incites us to protect the object in question; instinctive sense suggests the sort of protection given on this occasion. So that to cuddle, is to show by action the genuine feeling and inborn instigation [impulse] of nature to kindness and love; to demonstrate true affection towards, and also to take instinctively the best means of protecting the one then in question. JOHNSON denounces to cuddle, for a low term. It may not suit a formal occasion; but surely it is one well fitted for use when familiar occasion suggests it to us. The French choyer and the Spanish cuidar, evidently belong to this source, Tuck, tuk, instinct, natural feeling; also natural power of mind, &c.; properly, tok; and grounded in togen, to draw, to attract, to bring towards. But it were useless to go beyond this mark in the present article. In itself tuck, tock, is the root-word of tocken, to touch, to feel. Hued as the third person present of hueuden, hoeden, to take care of, to protect, to guard; whence we may account for the o in to coddle, for that is groundedly the same verb as to cuddle, in the sense of to treat with tenderness or affection, to employ great care and attention in the treatment of; so that to coddle, instead of tuck hued el, is as tuck hoed el. The form of a verb, in which we now use the phrase, has arisen from the analogous sound of the travesty; for tuck hued el, sounds to cuddle. El, other, another, any one. From hueuden, we have our verb to hide, spelt by CHAUCER hidden; to hide oneself, is to cover oneself, to protect oneself, to get out of impending danger; a hiding-place, is a place for protection, a covering-place, a concealment; and our term hide, as skin, is simply as that which covers or protects.

Have you mark'd the partridge quake,
Viewing the tow'ring falcon high?
She CUDDLES low below the brake;
Nor would she stay nor dares she fly." PRIOR.

OBS. Se choyer is, to coddle oneself, to take too great concern in oneself. Cuida bien lo que haces; take good care of what you are about.

THE BOG.

A well-known term for the house of office or necessary; sometimes bog-house. De voeghe [voeg]; q. e. the convenience, the necessary, la commodité, the conveniency. B, p, and f, as has been before observed, are used in the same dialect as a same letter indifferently; in Dutch pigghe, bigghe, and vigghe, whence our pig and big, are the same word: endless other instances might be adduced. Voeghe has also the meaning of manner, way, mode, and is the source of the Italian foggia in the same sense. But bog as bog-earth, or land covering water, is, I suspect, as boghe; q. e. bending, yielding, flexible, and the participle present of boghen, boogen, to bend; or it may be simply as boghe, an arch; but the first seems the true source. JOHNSON derives the word from the Irish, where he says bog means soft.

BLACK.

[Formerly BLAKE]; in the usual sense. Founded in blick, blik [a flash of the eye, a look, a sudden or instantaneous opening of the eye]; but in its ground sense, sight, light; hence blickse, blicksing [now blicksem] a flash of lightning, and the expression, in een blicksem, as quick as lightning, or, as we say, in the twinkling of an eye; for the two phrases are of synonymous import. The sense of blick, blik, as light, sight, was acquired by the notion of our forefathers, that sight was light centring its beams upon the object looked at, which thus became visible or lighted up; and thence their term for to see was belichten; q. e. to belight, to throw light upon, to enlighten; which word comes out of be-lio-en; q. e. be, the connecting prefix, lio, light, and en, the infinitive sign, whence beli-igen, and the contractions blicken, blick, blik. We still say, to throw light upon a subject, in the sense of making it clear, evident, and in the very direction of meaning included in the notion prevalent in former days,—which was, in fact, making a sort of dark-lantern of the eye. The thema is lio, lu, lo, in the import of light, lux, lumen. From blik, blick, a flash, as intense light, comes bleek [bleak] expressing a diminished intensity of light; a sense infused by the extended or lingering nature of the sound of ee, when compared with that of the shorter and sharper i; and by a still more extended or lingering sound, represented by the broad a, we have black [formerly blake] as expressing the sense of the disappearance or loss of light altogether, and thus dark. [For the development and rationale of the scale of sound represented by vowels in regard to its effect in the modification of the import of words, the reader is referred to the philological treatises of Bilderdijk]. A black heart, is a dark nature, a disposition without due warmth; heart being, in that phrase, as the aspirated aert, aart, aerd, nature. [See BLACKGUARD VOL. I. p. 125.] A black hole, is a dark hole. But the term, a blacksmith, is as as; er blyke smid; q. e. in him appears the smith; by his appearance you may see he is a smith; importing, by the tint or smut imparted by the exercise of his smutty trade.—To BLACKEN, in the expression, TO BLACKEN a man's character, is as the Dutch belachen; q. e. to laugh at, to ridicule, to degrade by sneering, and thus to lower a man's character, to treat it with contempt or ridicule. Blyke, as the third person, potential mood, of blicken, blecken, blyken, to flash, to appear, to have the appearance of, to be apparent and sounds black, formerly blake. Lachen, to laugh, belachen, to belaugh. Smid, smed, smith. Smette, smut. We can't say to BLACK a man's character; and to blacken is evidently the travesty of some original form of word. The Dutch blaescken [to flame], bleecken [to bleach] belong here.

TO BLEED.

Te belijden; q. e. to let out, to bring out, to conduct, to lead out, to draw out, to pass out, to carry out, to part from, to go from, as used in either an active or deponent sense. The word has no relation to blood, as usually supposed, a bit more than to any other matter. We say, to bleed a man's pocket or purse, in the sense of to draw from or out of a man's pocket or purse. He bleeds freely, is, he parts with what is his freely. He bleeds at the nose, is, he lets out at the nose. To bleed a horse, is, to draw or let out from a horse. In one case his means or money is inferred, in the other his or its blood, by the nature of that which the expressions tend to when used. Te belijden sounds to bleed, when the infinitive termination en is dropped, as in our present form of dialect: ij sounding ee. Belijden has also the meaning of to confess, and of to take confession, and is then to let out and to draw out, as is done when any one makes or takes confession. From lijden, to pass on, to go by, we have our to lead, still used by the Scotch in the sense of to carry out or draw. To lead dung into the field, is the phrase in Scotland for to carry out or draw out dung into the field. Lead makes led in the past participle, and bleed makes bled. To lead a horse, is, to pass him on; to lead a bad life, is to carry on a bad life. Belijden as above explained is as the compleutive be and lijden, to pass on or by, to carry on or out, to draw.

BLIND.

As the Dutch blind, blend, in the same sense; and grounded in the thema li, lie, lio, lu, light, as noticed in a preceding article: and blind seems to be as the participle present of be-li-en in the import of belight, to light, and thus as belighting [lighting powerfully] and so overpowering sight for a period, and during that period causing blindness [extinction of vision]. Don't we say, the light was so powerful that it put my eyes out?—and does not a flash of lightning overpower the sight [blind one] for a moment? And blind is not as a continued state of cecity, but as cecity indefinitely felt and expressed. Our to blind, as well as the French blanc [white] and the Italian bianco, belong here; but of this elsewhere.

LOVE APPLE.

As the well-known fruit the Spanish tomata. I take it to be the translation of its French appellation pomme d'amour, and that to be a sound travesty of the Italian pomo d'oro, the name by which this fruit is known in Italy. Why the fruit should be called pomo d'oro, q. e. golden apple, is evident; but for why it should be called pomme d'amour, q. e. love apple, we have no rational foundation than that of some accidental corruption and consequent misrepresentation of the true term for it.

BLOOD.

In Dutch bloed, is the same word, in point of source, as flood, in Dutch vloed, from vloeden, vloeien, to flow; and thus as that which flows [runs] throughout the channels of the living body; the thema of vloeien is vlo-en, to flow, to go on. Blood and blade, in the sense of a vain man, an ostentatious pretender to courage or bravery, are one word; and grounded in vla-en, in the import of to strip, to flay, to divest, to bare; whence the old Dutch term blaut, the modern bloot [naked, bare], as well as bloo, blooe, blood, worthless, inefficient, trumpery, as that which is bare of, or deficient in the due qualities belonging to its sort; so that a blood and a blade are a same term for a worthless person, one who with the over-strained pretensions to valour and worth has, in fact, none of either in him. Our to fly, to flee, fleet, to float, flight [formerly flyte, in Dutch vlugt], &c., evidently belong here. Vli-en, vla-en, vlo-en, are one thema.

“ You'll find yourself mistaken, Sir, if you'll take upon you to judge of these BLADES by their garbs, looks, and outward appearance.”—L'ESTRANGE.

“ The news put divers young BLOODS into such a fury, as the ambassadors were not, without peril, to be outraged.”

BACON.

BREAST.

In German brust; in both forms the metathesis of the Dutch barst, borst, in the same sense; and either as the præterite of borren, to bubble up, to boil up, as water from a spring; and thus as that which is swoln up, raised up, swelled out; or else grounded immediately in the thema ro-en, to rise, to mount, to become higher.

BEER.

The Dutch bier [properly bier;] q. e. foamer, fermenter, blower. Biën, is to blow up or send up froth [bubbles], to form scum or froth. So that beer is as fermenting liquor; or that which becomes fit for use by passing through a state of fermentation.

BEE.

The same word with the Dutch bije, bie, in the same sense, and the ellipsis of bie-vlieg; q. e. piercing-fly, and thus fly with a sting or prickle; bie being as the participle present of bi-en, pi-en, to prick, to pierce, to sting, and also to suck or sip, and thus including the characteristics of to prick and to sip or suck, as those which principally distinguish the fly or insect called bee.

FIDDLE.

The Dutch vedel, veel, a corruption of the Italian viola, grounded in the Dutch viool, fiool, the Graeco-Latin phiala, a flask or bottle with a double belly [of which the hour-glass gives no unapt idea in point of shape], and which bottle is still used in some parts of the continent, especially for the Hungarian wines. It is, in fact, a bottle considerably contracted about the middle, and bellying out at the upper, but more manifestly at the lower portion; of which characteristic form the violin or fiddle is in a conspicuous degree its representative, and from which this has in course of time acquired its denomination.

BEAST.

As the Dutch beest, originally a feminine noun; grounded in be-en, to be, whence the Dutch ik ben, I am, I be, which be was formerly spelt by us ben, as with the Dutch. In the above gender the term simply implied a being, a creature. But in the neuter gender, in which the word is now used, viz. het beest [the beast] it is the representative of a collective sense, and as if it were gebeest [the beast kind or race], just as gedierte means the animal race; while dier implies singly animal, creature. The prefix ge of the Dutch is a collective or combining preposition, and answers to the Latin cum, con, co, in composition, as has been before said. Beest retains the feminine gender only in the phrase de beest spelen, to act or behave like a beast, to storm, to rave, as a being without reason. So that beast is as one endowed with mere existence, and no more, and thus impliedly exclusive of all other qualification. JOHNSON derives the word from the French bête, as the Latin bestia; but bestia is no other than beest with the Latin feminine termination.

" Remembrest thou that thou ar're a man ? B. Why shulde I not rememb're that [quoth I] ? P. Mayst thou not tell me than [quoth she] what thing is man ? Askest thou not me [quoth I] whether that I be *a resonable mortall best ? I wote well and confesse that I am it."—CHAUCER.

BRED.

Educated, prepared by instruction, made ready; as when we say, he is a well-bred man, and mean, he is as one well instructed in the duties which befit his station in society; one properly prepared for social intercourse; of which phrase an ill-bred man is the reverse. Wie hel bereed; q. e. as one thoroughly prepared [made ready, instructed, trained]. The term is referred by JOHNSON to the verb to breed, but falsely and absurdly. To breed, is to generate, to procreate, to produce from self; and will the being well generated or procreated, make any one aware of that which is implied by the phrase a well-bred man? Will the being generated or procreated in any way, or by any person, make a man that which is meant by well-bred? Reason and experience belie such source for the term; but which is duly accounted by that above given. To breed up young persons, as the tutor or schoolmaster does, is not to generate them, but to educate them; and to breed is, then, as te bereeden, to prepare [educate]. He was bred up a tailor, is not he was generated, or procreated, a tailor; but, he was educated [made ready] to be a tailor. A well-bred horse is a duly trained [prepared] horse. When a person is entrusted with the breeding of your children, it is not the generating them, but the preparing or educating them, that is entrusted to him. Good breeding is good education [preparation] not good generating. Bereed, the participle past of bereeden, to make ready, to prepare. Hel, excellently, perfectly, highly. Wie, as, like as, in the manner of. But to breed, in the unsophisticated sense of that verb, is as the Dutch breeden, breyden, to extend, to increase, to make wide, to make more of, and that is what is done by generation or procreation. Wie hel sounds well, and bereed, bred. By confounding the term, JOHNSON has made a sad mess of to breed in his Dictionary.

* Beast, being; and thus as we should now say, a mortal being endowed with reason.

A JEW'S EYE.

An expression already explained in page 24 of the first volume of this essay; to which add the following extract from SHAKSPEARE, where he has the expression in a more ancient form, and consequently one nearer to the sound of the original, of which it is in the incipient stage of the present travesty. Jewess-eye is nearer to gewisheid, the original form of the phrase, than Jew's-eye, the more recent form of the phrase. [See Vol. I., p. 24, for article referred to].

“There will come a Christian by Will be worth a JEWESS-EYE.” SHAKSPEARE.

A BARON.

As in the phrase, A BARON of beef, and meaning the whole back without the limbs. Er baer rand [ronde]; q. e. there is the naked circumference, the whole circumference and its contents without the appendages. Baer, naked, bare. Rand, circumference; ronde, circumference, circuit, and either term will do; the d is sounded in neither; so that baer rond sounds baron. All that JOHNSON says about the phrase is, that “a baron of beef is, when the two sirloins are not cut asunder, but joined together by the backbone.” But is that accounting for the phrase? Are we made a bit the wiser in relation to the source of any of the terms in the phrase by it? A SIRLOIN, as in the expression a sirloin of beef; and meaning the upper portion of a side of the animal which affords the meat called beef. Sie'r leyne; q. e. see there a leaning part; this is a leaning piece; a portion on which the animal rests for support; and, in fact, the part in question is the upper portion of one of the legs of one of the sides of the ox to which it had belonged. Sie'r leyne sounds sirloin. JOHNSON tells you the syllable sir in the term is as the title given to a loin of beef, which one of the Kings knighted in a fit of merriment. As fitly might he have said that the sir, in a sir reverence, is a royal title! If any king was fool enough to do such a thing, as to knight a piece of beef, and that's the only probable part of the story, it must have been the already existing sir, as a syllable in the term, that put the thought into his head. Leyne, lene, a leaning, a lean to, a support, a prop. Sie'r, sie er, see there, behold there, and sounds as we pronounce sir. The i as in fir, stirr, and not as in fire, tire, sire.

COMFORT.

In the well-known import. A term which has no precisely corresponding equivalent in any other language, and is, in fact, the travesty of a sentence. Kume voort; q. e. sighing away! hence with groaning [pining, trouble, lamentation, care, painful sensation, difficulty; let there be no more disagreeable feeling] and sounds comfort, as we pronounce comfort. Kumen [anciently cumen], kuymen, to lament, to sigh, to groan, to pine, to whine. Voord, voort, further off, away, hence, out with. Kume, kum, the participle present of kumen. And what is comfort but the ridding of painful or distressing feelings?—and what a greater or more cheering pleasure than relief from them? JOHNSON says the word is from the verb to comfort, and that from the low [dog] Latin comforto, while, in truth, he ought to have seen the Latin term has been made out of the English word. That a scholar, such as JOHNSON, should be led to suppose a sound English term could have been derived from dog Latin, to the genuine type of which language the term in question bears not even the remotest analogy! To what other term is comforto related in Latin? Besides, is not the very book he quotes a quiz upon that language? Salvia confortat nervos, says the SCHOLA SALERNITANA; but who would think of taking such a source as an authority for the origin of any word in any language! As well might an Italian cite the maccaronick poem of MERLINUS COCEAJUS, for the origin of some Italian word. The Dutch have the adverb kume, kuyme, difficulty, hardly, with pain, & peine, agrè; and evidently of this family. To comfort, comfortable, comfortableness, &c., are all formations from the substantive comfort, as accounted for in this article. Our to cumber, to incumber, and the French encombrer, in the sense of to impede, to make troublesome [difficult], to embarrass, belong to the same kumen, cumen, but without the word voort, which reverses, or takes away its direct or positive import.

“ I will keep her ignorant of her good,
To make her heavenly COMFORTS of despair,
When it is least expected.” SHAKSPERE.

“ Her soul, heaven’s queen, whose name she bears,
In COMFORT of her mother’s fears,
Has placed among her virgin train.” BEN JOHNSON.

A THIEF IN THE CANDLE.

In the common and well-known acceptation of that expression. Er sie hef in de kant; tille! q. e. see there a sticking out on one side; remove it! See there’s something projecting on one side [of the wick]; take it away! Thus a prosopopœia of some one of the company to the one conveniently near to the candle in question, and sounds precisely as we pronounce the travesty. Hef, heve, elevation, rising, projecting, heaving. Tille, the imperative tillen, to take up or away, tollere.

NERVES.

In the sense explained at p. 240, Vol. I., of this essay, where the first member of the term is taken to be as the travesty of naer, in the import there given; instead of which naer, I suspect ner to be as the Dutch nar, narre, foolish, absurd, distortedly endowed in mind, unwise, stupid, narrowed [weakened] in intellect; and the term nerves, as used in the expression, his is a disease of the nerves, to be as, nar-wees; q.e. absurd distresses, foolish woes, evils arising from an undue state of the mind, sorrows caused by a distorted or unnatural affection of the intellect; and thus as unreal [fictitious] woes, distress arising from a weakened mind; and is not this what is meant by our term when used as above stated? Nervous, as in the expression a nervous person, is as narwoes, woes being in the form of our dialect, as shewn in the above cited article. A nervous person may be, with the exception of this partial affliction, a man of genius, and nothing more derogatory to general talent is implied by the epithet, than is when we say a gouty person or a blind or lame person. Nar, narre, foolish, weak-minded, and naer, near, narrow, straitened, stinted, diminished, are evidently of a same stock; a narrow mind is an imperfect weak, stinted mind, one of less compass than what it ought duly to be.

OFF-HAND.

At once, readily, without trouble. Af hyend, q.e. without labour, without pain [fatigue, trouble], Af, off, from, without, set aside. Hyend, as the participle present of hyen, hijen, to labour, to pant, to pain, to vex ; and sounds as we pronounce hand.

BROUGHT TO BED.

As when we say, she is brought to bed of a girl [or boy]. Beraeckt toe bede ; q. e. reached that which she prayed for ; arrived at the summit of her desire ; obtained the object of her prayer ; and in the sense of, she has been delivered by the course of nature from the trouble and pangs incident to child-bearing, and attained a state of comparative ease and happiness. A phrase in literal form sheer nonsense, and an evident travesty of some original one which was not so. Raecken, gheraecken, beraecken, to touch, to reach, to arrive at, to attain. Bede, prayer, petition, request ; whence the term beads, used for the numbering of prayers said by the Catholic devotees. Beraeckt toe bede sounds brought to bed.

SPIRIT.

In the direct import of that term ; and which, in that form of spelling, is as the Latin spiritus, but groundedly the same word with our sprite, spright, sprit [formerly spelt spryte and also sprete] and the French esprit. Spreyde ; q. e. spreading throughout, pervading, extending in all directions, circulating, going about, and the t and d being interchanging letters, sounds as we pronounce sprite. The word is the participle present of the Dutch spreyden, spreeden, to spread, to extend ; so that spirit is as quality or effect extending throughout ; the pervading essence belonging to the substance or system in question ; the pervader of the system received from nature. A man of spirit, is one duly supplied with this inscrutable, but essential, quality by the hand of nature. To act with spirit, is to act by the inspiration [or at the instigation] of a due nature, as duly affected by the quality implied by the term; one to human sense unknown, except by the effect produced. The spirit moves me, is as I am moved by that indefinite essence [quality] which pervades and excites me to do or say [as may follow]. A spirit, as the imaginary or undefinable appearance of a person in question, is as his bodiless existence; himself without that which makes him visible to his fellow men. For spirit, in its true sense, can apply only to the human being. We cannot say the spirit of a horse or cow, in the sense of the ghost of a horse or cow. In the expression a horse of spirit, the phrase of spirit, is simply the travesty of, af spier-hitte; q. e. of a warm constitution [frame, muscular composition]; one with a due warmth [fire, heat] of constitution. Spier, muscle, muscular system; marrow, pith. Hitte, heat, warmth. Af spier-hitte, sounds of spirit. Spirits in the phrases, animal spirits, good or bad spirits, out of spirits, is no plural of the word spirit, but evidently the travesty of spier-hitte; q. e. muscular excitement, the exciting or warmth [fire, heat] of the muscular system, and sounds spirits. Hitse, the participle present of hiten, hisschen, to heat, to excite, to instigate, to provoke, to set on, to put into action, to inflame; whence hitte, heat, as the pervading quality which excites, makes warm, fires [heats, inflames] wherever it reaches. Spirits of wine, is the essence of wine the warming, exciting quality of wine, divested of its combined body or matter; in literal form, sheer nonsense. Animal spirits, is as muscular, bodily, [physical] excitement, opposed to that of mind or moral [essential] excitement. To spirit away, in the sense of to take or carry suddenly off, to make to go abruptly, unaccountably away, is as t'u spier hiet er wee; q. e. your senses [bodily faculties, perceptions] tell you there is misfortune where you are; your senses warn you of an existing or coming misfortune, and implying, of course, you must take yourself off, you had better go out of its way, get out of its reach; and sounds to spirit away. T'u, to you, sounds to. Hieten, heeten, to order, to command, to call to. Wee, woe, misfortune, misery. The original expression resounding into a verb in the travesty, the other tenses we use it in have been formed according as applied. To spirit, also spelt to sprit, bowsprit as that which extends from the bow of a ship, and the Latin spirare, belong to the above-explained spreyden. HORNE TOOKE says angel, saint, spirare, sancire! the past participles of αγγελλειν, spirare, sancire!

"Spirit is a substance wherein thinking, knowing, doubting, and a power of moving do subsist."—Locke.

"The spirit shall return unto God that gave it."

BIBLE.

BREATH.

In the usual sense. Breede [breijde]; q. e. extending, expansion, dilating, diffusion, pouring forth, in an indefinite sense; and what else is breath? Breede, breijde, the participle present of breeden, breyden, to expand, to diffuse, to send forth or abroad, to make broader, to widen, with which our to braid, in the latter direction of its sense is a same word. It need scarcely be said that our term breadth is also of this stock, as well as an almost endless number of other words.

GO TO HELL.

As the crusty answer to some impudent or artful applicant. Gauw toe el; q. e. sly fellow you must apply to some one else [go elsewhere]; implying, it won't do with me; I see what you are at, my sharp fellow, betake yourself to some other person. Gauw, clever, sly, always upon the look-out, sharp, cunning; and sounds go. Toe el, to another, to elsewhere; sound el aspirated, and the phrase becomes GO TO HELL in pronunciation.

BRIGHT.

Radiant, shining, effulgent. Bijraeijt; q. e. berayed, radiant, covered with rays, rays into the bargain [more over]; and sounds precisely as we utter bright. Bij, there, at, on. Raeyen, radien, to shoot out rays, radiare.

“ What is the Sunne worse of his kinde right,
Though that a man, for feblesse of his eyen,
Maie not endure on it to see for BRIGHT.” CHAUCER.

A RUBBER AT WHIST.

Er op buer! er twist; q. e. come then, get up my friend! try your skill there! Up neighbour there! there's a prize struggle for you! Come my man, then! undertake the contest offered you [accept the call, match, defiance]. A prosopopoeia, in which one of the company in some social meeting calls upon another, who is doing nothing, to take his part in some play or game of skill which is going on or proposed at the time. In the original form of the words, no reference is had to any specific game; but in the sound they are precisely as we utter a rubber at whist; and of which phrase I have no doubt they are the true source, though, in course of use, importing a game or play governed by its appropriate rules. A game at whist is as the amusement [recreation] taken by that sort of contest or trial of skill. For the source and rationale of the term GAME, see the article of that word p. 123 of this volume. Er, there, then. Op! up! Buer, buur, boor, neighbour, next person. Twist, contest, trial, striving. JOHNSON says rubber is as game, contest, two games out of three; and whist, a game at cards requiring close attention and silence, vulgarly pronounced whisk!! and gives no etymology; but the word is placed under the head whist in the sense of hushed, stilled, and thus by implication may be meant to be held as the game of silence or stillness.

GENIUS.

Bent [inclination, disposition] of mind; natural disposition; turn of thought towards; also a favouring spirit; a spirit [power, ideal being] that favours [guards, protects]; a guardian angel; a power well disposed to the object in question; tutelar deity. A word adopted by us in its Latinized form; in Italian, genio; in French, genie. Evidently grounded in geneghen [geneyghen]; q. e. inclined, bent, as the past participle of neyghen, nijghen, to bend, to incline towards, and thus as the natural bent [inclination, turn] of the mind. We say, he has a turn for poetry, his mind is bent upon poetry, he has an inclination for poetry, he has a genius for poetry, all in a like direction of import. Neyen, to neigh, to snort, as horses do, belongs here, as an act accompanied by inclining the head; and so does our to sneeze.

HOLD YOUR PEACE.

The brow-beating command for silence [quiet, submission, obedience]. Hold u, er pese; q. e. pay respect, there is the whip; behave yourself properly, there is the thong [lash] ready for you else. Holden, hulden, houden, to pay respect to, to submit to, to do homage. Pese, pees, pizzle, rod, nerve, tendon, string, cord; a bull's pizzle is even now the customary instrument for flogging and punishment in many parts of the continent.

A FOP.

A person offensive to society by an unnatural over-delicate appearance or manner; disgusting from an exaggerated refinement in dress; from affected niceness; an effeminate man. Er foey'p; q. e. fye ! upon him there ! Fye upon the thing I see there! and thus expressive of the disgust felt by the speaker of the words for the object in question. Foey, fye, fie, faugh ; an apostrophe expressive of aversion. 'P, op, upon ; foey'p sounds fop. Foppery, fopish, are formations from fop. JOHNSON says, fop is probably a word made by chance, and therefore without etymology ! But can any word representing a feeling or perception of a rational being be said to be made by chance, that is, without design or intention ? And to say a word may be without an etymology, seems to me to say, an effect may be without a cause. A word must be the representative of a perception, and the cause of that perception is the origin [ETYMOLOGY] of the word.

SIR REVERENCE.

As the covert expression for excrement, filth. Sie'r heve, veere hans ; q. e. see the excrement there ; away with it, fellow ! behold the nastiness there, away with it, boy ! Sie'r, sie er, see there. Hef, heffe, heve, excrement, fœx, refuse, as the participle present of heffen, heven, to take away, to lift or part from, and so to get rid of, to reject or eject, to excrete, to secrete, to separate from.— Veere, as the imperative of veeren, vaeren, to further, to take off or away, to proceed on. Hans, fellow, assistant, jack-pudding, puppet. The original expression scarcely differs in utterance from the travesty. [See SIRLOIN, p. 279 of this volume.] From heven, in the sense of to lift up, we have our to heave, and heaven, as that which is lifted indefinitely, undefinably aloft [on high], and haven as the place of taking in or up for security [out of danger], a place of safety, a place where ships, cargoes, &c. are out of reach and so out of danger.

A WILL OF THE WISP.

See p. 105. VOL. I., where from Er, in the first line, to plum, in the eighth, is to be erased, and the following text substituted. The remainder to be continued. Er welle af de wijse'p; q. e. there a spontaneous exhalation is the conductor forwards; there something that has arisen naturally is the showing forwards [the director offwards]. Welle, as the participle present of wellen, to spring up, to gush out, and thus a natural springing up or exhalation [appearance].

Nursery Rhymes;

Continued from Volume I., in which the prefaces, containing what I had to premise in regard to them, are contained. And I shall here only repeat, that however wide the difference of letter between the original and their travesties may appear to the eye, the true pronunciation being given to each, they will be found to correspond in sound, and the originals of all to be a series of rude and angry pasquinades, from the mouths of the then heathen Saxon, against the intruding, greedy, grasping Missionaries of the Church of Rome.

37.—*Great A, little A, Bouncing B.
The cat's in the cupboard,
And she can't see.*

Gij rette ëë, lij t'el ëë,
Pije hoon sie in Bije.
De guyt's in de kop boort,
End schie karne te sij.

You of the cowl [Church, priesthood] hold out the law to us, while you yourselves break it in every way, and hold us [the tillers of the land] as objects of your contempt [scorn]. The crafty villain has found his way into your head, and in a trice turns the contents to his own use [takes the management of its contents].

Retten, reddēn, to assert, to uphold by speech. Eë, laws Lij, injury, curse. Pije, cowl, friar's hood, and thus a trope for the Priesthood of whose dress it was a distinguishing article. Hoon, disgrace, subject of contempt, dishonour. Sij, the third person potential mood of sien, to see, to behold.

Bijs, bee, the type of the industrious husbandman or land-holder. Guyt, villain, cunning rascal, filching fellow. Kop, head. Booren, to bore, to inauinate itself into, to get into by degrees, as is done by boring. Schië, schislyck, soon, quickly, rapidly. Kerne, kerne, kernel, nucleus. Te sjij, to him, to himself. Kerne te sjij, sounds as we utter can't see. Eë sounds A, as we now pronounce that letter. Guyt, travesties by sound into cat, the c and g intermutate. Cat, gatto, gato, chat, katte, kots are one word.

The Priesthood, while it kept the noses of its dupes hard to the grindstone, played fast and loose in their own concerns; for at that time of day the clerical class included both the framers and the practisers of the law as well as the lay and secular clergy, and used it accordingly. Hence their contempt for the helpless and unprivileged orders of the people, whose hard earned substance they contrived to extort by superstition and chicanery, and then consumed it in a life of hypocrisy and profligacy. Evidently the prosopopœia of some suffering and embittered Saxon, some individual a prey to the papal locusts of that day, but not so docile and easy to benoodle as others of his heathen countrymen. The two last lines are uttered in despair of his fellow Saxons, considering their case to be then hopeless in as far as they had surrendered their intellects to the use of these foreign wheedlers. I need not repeat that p and b are amalgamating sounds, so that pye hoon sis in, resounds into bouancing.

38.—*Little maid, pretty maid, whither goest thou ?
Down in the forest to milk my cow.
Shall I go with thee ?—No, not now ;
When I send for thee, then come thou.*

Lijdt el mede, praet hie mede, Wije, seer goëst t'hou ?

Toe hun inne de voërl rest ; t'u melok meë kaauw.
Schell Hye goë wijse t'bie nooë ; noodt naauw.
Wee'n Hye ! sende voërl t'bie ; t'hen kom t'hou.

When from home the holy man is companionable, prattles with all the village, and is condescending with every one at the homage [adoration] day.—With him the doing nothing is what brings in his provender: while you, with the milk you get, have a jackdaw [priest] to keep into the bargain. The jovial condescending fleecer of the labourer pleads the law of necessity to the village; and exacts rigorously from it. Woe to the hard-working peasant. The scythe is the provider for the village: for his [the priest's] community the begging-dish [that which he hands round at the homage or festival day].

Lijdt the third person present of lijden, lyden, to bear with, to put up with, to be sociable. El mede, with the other, with the neighbour, with any one. Præsten, to prate, to chatter, to prattle. Hie, village; vicus, country-street. Wije, holy, holy person, the priest. Seer, very. Goë, goede, kind, good-humoured, affable. T'hou, is hou, at the homage, adoration, a ceremony or festival at which the proprietary and peasants were necessarily present. Toe hun [to him], t and d intermutating sounds down. Voér, voeder, fodder, provender, provision. Innen, to bring in. Rest, quiet, stillness, state of inaction. T'u, ts u, to you. Melck, milk. Mæd, mede, along with. Kaauw, Magpie, Jackdaw, Jay, a trope of the chattering priest. Schell-Hye, Peel-Peasant, trope for the exacting Monk. Schellen, to shell, to strip. Hye, has been repeatedly explained. Goë, as above. Wijzen, to pretend, to make wise as they used to say in Devonshire, in the sense of to sham. Nooë, noodë, necessity, want. Nooden, to exact. Naauw, narrowly, strictly. Wee'n, wee aan, woe upon sounds when. T' hie, ts hie, to the village, to the street or row of houses. Send, seyne, scythe, sickle, reaping-hook. Kom, dish, bowl, plate; as that which was carried about by the Monk at church festivals.

39.—*Bow, wow, wow,
Whose dog art thou?
Little Tommy Tinker's Dog;
Bow, wow, wow.*

*Bouw, wije houw, wije houw!
Woe's doghe, Haere t' hou
Lijde hel toe mij tiend! Keer's doghe.
Bouw, wije houw, wije houw.*

Cultivate the land! Honour the holy man!
Honour the holy man! Where there is property, there the man of the frock [the Monk] is sure to pay his respects. Tithes are a sad nuisance to me!
Why that's the value [the beauty] of having become a Christian [of being converted, of conversion.]

 Cultivate the land ! Honour the holy man !
 Honour the holy man !

Bouw, the imperative of bouwen, to work the ground, to cause the land to produce. Wije, soley, the holy one. Houw, do homage to, show respect towards. Haere, sackcloth, the friar's frock or garment, the trope for the Monk. T'hou, te hou, te houd, for a friend, acts kindly towards. Lijde, as the participle present of lijden, to suffer from, to be injured by. Tiends, liende, tienden, tithe, tiend. Doghe, value, worth, price, beauty, excellence. Kær, turn, conversion, turning round. Hel, clear, evident.

A tirade which requires no explanation. Wije-how sounds woow; woe's doghe, whose dog; Haere't t'hou, art thou, leaving to aspire Haere; lijdt hel toe mij, little Tommy, leaving to asperate hel; tiend keer's doghe, tinker's dog.

40.— Won't be my father's Jack,
Won't be my mother's Gill ;
I will be the fiddler's wife,
And have music when I will.
T'other little tune,
T'other little tune ;
Pr'ythee love, play me
T'other little tune.

Woonte Bije ; mee vaer t'heer's Jacke ;
Hye woont Bije ; meè moet t'heer's Gijl ;
Hye wie hilde Bije ; de vied t'el er's wij-huif ;
Hend have muize sich ; wenne Hye wie hilde.
Tart er lij t' el tuijn !
Tart er lij t' el tuijn !
Prijse, hije, el hoeve ! pleè m'hie !
Tart er lij t' el tuijn !

The good he does makes the influence of the cultivator of the soil [the farmer]; while the influence of the Churchman arises from the dread inspired by the doctrine he instills. The farmer provides the labourer in return for his assistance; while the lawyer's [then necessarily a member of the clerical order] importance is due to sheer impudence [effrontery]. The farmer is the working man's pantry [store]; the bane to all other than himself is the hooded holy one [the Churchman]: he lays in wait to surprise the property of others for himself, and makes use of the working man as his pantry [provider, store]. Agitate away, you plague to every farm! Agitate away, you plague to every farm! Appraise, disturb in its enjoyment, every neighbour's estate and household! Make the whole village [country, street] your own—use it as if it belonged to you! Agitate away, you curse to every farm!

Wonte, gewoonte, service, utility, effect, custom, usage. Bije, the husbandman, is before explained. Meé, mede, with, by vaer, fear, terror, apprehension. T'heer's, te heer is, becomes the master [superior]; gets the upper hand of the others. Jacke, the surplice; a trope for the Churchman. Hye, the working man; sounds, unspirited, as I, and has been explained. Woonen, to board, to provide for. Bije, husbandman. Moed, moet, confidence, assurance, a bold face. Gijl, guile, fraud; the trope for the lawyer, at that time of day always a member of the clerical body; and thus as a limb of the Church, and included by the then but half converted heathen Saxon in his angry invectives against it. Hyc and Bije, as before explained. Hilde, safe, pantry, in which the d has no more sound than in our word foundling, and many others. Vied, veed, veede, feud, disturbance, curse. T' el, te el, to another, to all others. Er's, er is, is there, becomes then. Wije huif, the holy hood, as worn by the Churchman of those days, and thus a trope for the whole body, as we now say The Church. Hend, near at hand, handy. Have, possession, property. Muiken, to mouse, to lay in wait for, as the cat does for the mouse, to muss; whence to amuse. Sich, for himself, to himself, and sounds sick. Wennen, ghewennen, to make a custom of, to use a thing as if it was one's own, and wenne is as the third person singular of the present tense of the potential mood. Wie, as, like. Hye and hilde, as before. Tarten, tergen, to provoke, to defy, to excite, to torment. Lij, lijde, durance, gathering, plague, curse. Tuyn, enclosed land, land taken from the wild state to be turned to the maintenance of the cultivator, and refers to the earliest stages of the civilization of society; in this sense it is the source of our word town, as an enclosed place. Prijzen, to praise, to appraise, to set a value upon, in the view to get at the full worth for their extortions. Hijen, as the imperative of hijen.

to vex, to disturb. Hoese, estate, landed estate, manse, manor; but originally in the sense of such portion of land as would serve to keep a rustic family, a countryman and his household. Jugera aliquot agri, que uni rusticus sufficiens ad familiam elendam; valgē HUFA and MANSUM, MANERIUM. And, hoevener, is as the husbandman or manager of such estate; the landlord. Pleſt, pleeghē, the imperative of pleeghen, to employ, to make use of, to act with or upon. M' his, med his, where his is village, rural street, vicus.

41.—1, 2, 3, 4, 5,
I caught a hare alive.
 6, 7, 8, 9, 10,
I let her go again.

Wan t'u ; tiere hij ; voer vee huive !
 Hye koert : er heer al huive !
 Sie Huyck 's even heet nae hun tiend ?
 Hye lette eere : Gau erg inue.

Arrogant towards you, he roars out,—Bring in stock for the Churchman ! The countryman groans; but the Churchman is here the master of all. See the man of the hood [the priest], how eager after his tithe ! I say, countryman ! let stand the plough; the sly fox would then have but a bad harvest [would be sadly taken in].

Wan, insolent, vain, impious, and sounds as we pronounce one, wone. Tieren to storm, to roar, to call out with noise. Voeren, to carry, to bring. Vee, live stock. Huive, the hood, a head-cover worn by the then priesthood, in which the lawyer was then included. Hys, peasant, worker, as before explained. Koeren, koerien, karien, to groan for grief, to mourn for vexation. Heer, master, lord, superior. Huyck, another form of huive, and in the sense above explained at that word. Even heest, equally hot, all alike eager, as greedy. Nae hun tiend, after his tithe, and sounds as we utter nine, ten. Hye, as before. Letten, to stop, to put an end to. Eere, the participle present of seren, to plough, formerly with us, to erie, in the same sense. Gauw, the sly one, the Churchman. Erg, arg, badly, sadly. Inne, as the third person of the present tense, potential mood of innen, to bring in, to carry home, to fetch in, and so to get in harvest or make profit.

42.—*I see the moon, and the moon sees me,
God bless the moon, and God bless me.*

Hye sie te moeijen, end te moeijen, sie's miē ;
Goed bije lese ! te moeijen ! end Goed bije lese miē !

Countryman, look to it and work hard, for to work hard is the way to get paid for it. Good farmer gather in all you can ! Slave, away ! and good farmer, scrape together as much profit as you can !

A Churchman's soliloquy ; in which by a mental prosopopœia, he calls upon the peasant and husbandman to slave and collect industriously and laboriously, feeling sure the more he may make the more the priest will get by his folly. Sie, look to it, see to it. Moeden, mueden, moeyen, to take pains, to labour hard, to take anxious trouble about a concern. Miē, miede, meed, return, pay, reward, Bijs, as before explained. Lesen, to collect, to gather in ; whence our to lease, in the sense of to glean, to gather up corn left in the field after the general clearing of the harvest folks ; as well as to lease in the sense of to let for money ; to gather money.

43.—*Tom Thumb, the Piper's son,
Stole a pig and away did run ;
The pig was eat, and Tom was beat,
Till he run crying down the street !*

Dom sie om, de Pye persse aen,
Stool er picke, end er wee dijd er hun ;
Die picke, wo aes hiet, end Dom wo aes biede,
Tille hie rund ; keere ei in ; doe aen die strijd.

Noodle ! do look about you there ! the cowl [the Churchman] is pressing you down to the earth ! The stole [the Church] is goading you without ceasing, and always adding to your miseries. He goads you ; where you have any provision to make it worth while, he takes the command of you in that case ; and noodle when he has any thing gives it up [offers it] to him. He carries off from here your cattle, sweeps away your eggs, and if any of you contest with him, he brings you before his own tribunal for your pains [to a court where he is both judge and jury, by way of making your mind easy as to the ultimate event].

Dom, blockhead, dunce, stupid fellow, a trope for the tythe-paying-countryman. Pys, as before explained, a trope for the Church. Perssen, to squeeze, to oppress, to weigh down, and of which our to press is the metathesis. Aen, upon, on. Stool, stole, a sacerdotal vestment put on during his solemnisation of a sacrament, a broad strip of cloth slung round the neck and crossed at the breast, where it fastens by a starlike ornament; in French étole, in Italian stola; here a trope for the priest. Picke, as the participle present of picken, to goad, to prick, to harass. Dijden, to increase, to augment. Woe, woe, sorrow, misery. Wo, where. Aes, provision, provender, food. Hieten, to command, to domineer. Bieden, to offer up, to come forward with. Tille, as the third person present potential mood of tillen, to take away, whence the Latin tollere. Rund, cattle. Keeren, to brush off, to sweep off. His, hier, here, in this place. Ei, egg. In, to himself. Doen aen, to accuse, to bring into court, to prosecute. Die, he, who. Strijden, to strive with, to struggle with, to contest. Picke, sounds pig, the ch, ck, and gh or g, being well-known convertible sounds; ick (I), the Gothic ig, eg, and the Latin ego, and the German ich, are one word.

44.—*John, come sell thy fiddle,
And buy thy wife a gown :
No I'll not sell my fiddle
For ne'er a wife in town.*

J'hoon, kom, celle, t'hye vied hel,
End bije-hye t'haeye wije-huif er goë hun.
Noð Hye n'aet celle, m'hye vied hel,
Vaer neér er wije-huif indouw hun.

Everlasting insult, the perpetual round of the oblation plate, the begging friar, are to the countryman a curse, a hell; while the industrious countryman is an estate to the shark of a Churchman. Demand, press eagerly for provision, you regular friar; be a curse, a hell to the countryman; and you, secular priest, stuff his head full of base fear [vain terror].

J'hoon, je hoon, always contemptuous treatment ; je, ever ; hoon, scoffing, ignominy. Kom, as has been explained, a dish, the one carried round for offerings from the assistants at Church on regulated festivals, and which then made a considerable portion of the Churchman's means. Celle, either as the ellipsis of klooster celle, and thus a monastery, or else as celle broeder, and a monk, but here used as paris pro toto, and thus the order of monks, or monkhood, in general. Hye, vied, hel, have been already repeatedly explained. Bije-hye, the industrious countryman, and sounds buy. Haeyé, shark, and thus the trope of rapacity, greediness, devouring instinct, t'haeys [te haeye] sounds thy. Wije-huif, as Churchman, has been also explained. Nó, the contracted imperative of nooden, to call upon, to claim, to restrain. Goé, goed, possessions, riches, fortune, estate. Ylen, ijlen, to hasten ; and yl is the second person of the imperative mood. Vaer, vaar, dread, terror, whence our word fear. Wije-huif, sounds wife. Neér, neder, humble, base, low, mean. Indouwen, to inculcate, to impress, to intrude upon, to bring in. Vaar, sounds for.

45.—Who kill'd Cock Robin?

*I, said the Sparrow,
With my bow and arrow,
And I kill'd Cock Robin.*

*Woe keye hilde, Ka oock'r hobb 'in Ei! sie Heyd de spaer-roé;
Wijse meé boé aen Haere rouw.
End Ei! Keye hilde, Ka oock'r hobb 'in.*

Wherever the Idiot has his store, the Jackdaw is sure to hop into it. Eh ! Rustic, be sure and see in him the infliction of all you have saved up ; and show yourself at the same time a rough boy [a sour acquaintance] to the fellow of the sackcloth. And, eh ! the fool has a store ; the Jackdaw at once hops therein !

Woe, where, there where, then. Keye, idiot, fool, crack-brained ; the trope for the husbandman as the dupe of the priesthood of those days. Ka, jackdaw, magpie, the type of the chattering Confessor then first intruding upon the heathen Saxon. Oock, at the same moment, also. 'R, er, there. Hobbe, hops ; hobben, to hop, to jump about like mad. In, into, within. Ei ! Eh ! Heyd, heyde, heyden, primeval possessor of the waste, aboriginal or uncivilized man, heathen, homo agrestis. De spær, spær, participle present of spærer, to spare, to save up, to lay by, and thus as the store or magazine. Rod, rods, rod, infliction, punishment. Wijse, to indicate, to show, to exhibit; hence the Devonshire expression, to make wise. Bee, the same word with our boy, as the contraction of bede, a messenger, one who does as he is bid, ordered: grounded in beden, to bid. Haere, sackcloth, as the dress of the Monk, and thus the trope for the Monkhood; in French haire: we say still, he is of the cloth, in the import of he belongs to the Church. Med, mede, forthwith, therewith. Aen, on, towards. Rouw, rude, austere, rough. The last line is a sort of ritornello, the words of which are as the echo of the first line, already explained.

*Who saw him die ?
I, said the fly,
With my little eye ;
And I saw him die.*

*Woe saë hemme d'Hye ;
Ei ! sie Heyd de fel Haeye ;
Wijse meë lij t' Hel-Haeye.
End Ei ! saë hemme d'Hye !*

Where timidity restrains the worker of the land ;
Eh ! Rustic ! See forthwith the ferocious shark !
Prove yourself at once a bane to this hell-shark !
And, Eh ! timidity does restrain the worker of the land !

Saë, saeghe, fear, timidity, pusillanimity. Hemmen, to hinder, hem in. Hye, working man, and here the trope of the utilizer of the native waste he belongs to ; he without whom the land would be for ever waste. Fel, atrocious, fierce, cruel, savage. Haeye, shark, the greedy, all-devouring monster of the sea, and here the trope for the Churchman of that day. Lij, lijde, suffering, annoyance. Hel-Haeye, hell-shark, as the then intruding Monk or Christian missionary was to the then heathen Saxon neophyte. The last line, as in the foregoing quatrain, is the ritornello, or echo, of the first line of the present.

*Who caught his blood ?
I, said the fish,
With my little dish ;
And I caught his blood.*

Woe koerd is bloot,
 Ei ! sie heyd de vitsch ;
 Wijse meê lijd ! hel die hische !
 End, ei ! koerd is bloot !

Where the herdsman is bare ; eh ! Rustic, behold the Polecat ; prove yourself forthwith a nuisance to him ! set sharply upon this fellow ! And eh ! the herdsman is bare !

Koerd, herdsman, and probably the source of our term cowherd, in the same sense. Bloot, bare, impoverished, stripped. Vitsch, fitchet, polecat, as the pest to the farm or poultry-yard, and thus the trope for the Churchman as the sinecure sharer of it. Hel, heliugh, sonorously, sharply, audibly. Hisschen, to instigate, to set on, to hiss at, to hoot. Ritornello.

Oss.—The words explained in any of the foregoing quatrains are not noticed in any of the subsequent ones.

Who will make his shroud ?
I, said the beetle,
With my thread and needle ;
And I'll make his shroud.

Woe wel make is schier oud,
 Ei ! sie heyd die biedt hel,
 Wijse meê te redde, end nie del.
 End ei ! el make is schier oud !

Where he that makes the store [the maker, making, factotum] is worn out by old age ; eh ! Rustic, the fellow present presents hell to him. Make him think [make him believe] your are delirious, and give him nothing [let him have no share of your store]. And eh ! he that puts together for the other is old and worn out !

Wos wel, where truly, when indeed. Maks, the particle present of maken, maachen, to make, to form, to put together. Bieden, to offer, to present, to set before. Dij, thee, to thee. R, er, there. Redde, ridde, fever, delirium. Nie, never, nothing. Delen, deylen, to share, to divide, to deal out. Ei, the other, another.

*Who will dig his grave ?
I, said the owl,
With my spade and shovel ;
And I will dig his grave.*

Woe wil dij hijghe, ijse, gar reve ;
Ei ! sie heyd de ouwel
Wijse meê 's paijd ; end schouw fel ;
End Ei ! well dij hijghe, ijse, gar reve.

When you are really gasping, becoming cold, and quite beside yourself; eh ! Rustic, behold the wafer at your side ! Make believe you have made your peace [that all is paid and settled]; and present him with a ferocious look. And eh ! you are really gasping, growing cold and quite beside yourself.

Hijghe, gasping for breath, as the participle present of hijghen, to gasp. Ijs, aspirated, sounds his, and is the participle present of ijsen, to grow cold, to become ice, to ice. Gar, entirely. Reve, as the participle present of reven, to rave, to be delirious; hence the French rêver, to dream. De Ouwel, the wafer, the host, the Catholic sacrament or viaticum. Pajd, 's paijd; is paijd, as the participle past of paijen, to appease, to settle, to pay. Schouw, the imperative of schouwen, to cast a look, to look at.

*Who will be the parson ?
I, said the Rook,
With my little book ;
And I will be the parson.*

Woe wel bije de Pye harre soen
Ei ! sie heyd dij 'r hoeck ;
Wijse meê lij t'hel-beuck,
End ei ! wel bije de Pye haare soen !

Whenever the cowl [priest] hesitates [makes a difficulty, delays] to give the husbandman his absolution. Eh ! Rustic, behold some catch [bait, hook]; be sure you show yourself an opposer to this paunch of hell. And eh ! the cowl does delay its absolution !

Bije, bee, the trope of the industrious man, the utilizer of the earth, the farmer or agriculturist of those days, the primeval landholders. Pye, cowl, the trope of the priest. Harren, to defer, to postpone. Soen, reconciliation, absolution. Hoecke, haecke, hook, bait, snare. Hel-beuck, hell-belly, the trope of the all devouring Clergy of that day.

Who'll be the clerk ?
I, said the Lark,
If 'tis not in the dark ;
And I'll be the clerk.

Woe Hel-Bije de klerk ;
 Ei ! sie heyd d'el harcke,
 Hef! hiet! snauwt, hin dij d'harcke
 End ei ! Hel-Bije de klerck !

Where the monk is an infliction to the landholder. Eh ! Rustic, be sure you behold the rake [scrape-all] of his fellow creatures ; huff ! command ! snarl away the rake [scraper] from your presence. And eh ! the monk is an infliction upon the landholder.

Hel, hell, punishment: woe hell, sounds who'll. Klerek, monk, clergyman, clericus, clerk, the cloth, the clergy. Heffen, to rise up, to ferment, to become heated, hence our to huff, as to speak angrily to. Histen, to speak imperiously to, to order. Snauwen, to snub, to speak sharply to, to scold. Hin, hen, heen, hence, away, off. Hin dij, from thee.

Who will carry him to his grave ?
I, said the Kite,
If it's not in the night,
I'll carry him to his grave.

Woe wel Ka 'r hij hemme t'u ; " ijse ! gar reve ;"
 Ei ! sie Heyd de Guyte
 Heft ! ijse ! snauwt ! hin dij ! nae hiet.
 End ei ! hel-Ka 'r hij hemme toe dij ; " gar reve ! "

Whenever the Jack-daw [Monk, Confessor] mumbles [mutterts] to you, " You are becoming cold ! your head is quite gone !" Eh ! Rustic, behold in him the knave ; Huff in a terrifying tone ! Call out ! Snarl ! Bawl to him, " Away with thee !" [take yourself off !] And, Eh ! the Hell-jackdaw, there he mumbles [hums, sings out, buzzes in the ear] to you, this is all raving [dreaming, delusion].

Homme as the third person singular potential mood hemmen, hummen, to mutter, to buzz. Guyts, villain, rogue, rascal ; k and g intermutate, our starling and the Dutch starlinck are the same word ; uy sounds as the i in kits. Nae, after, nae hiet, sounds night.

Who will carry the link ?
I, said the Linnet,
Will fetch it in a minute ;
And I'll carry the link.

Woe wel Ka 'r hij dij hel hencke :
Ei! sie Heyd del' in 'et ;
Wel fij heet ! Jette hin er ! mijn hutte !
End ei! hel-Ka 'r hij dij hel hencke !

Whenever the Jackdaw [chatterer] he hangs up before you the picture of Hell ; Eh ! Rustic, be aware he has a share in the concern ; call out lustily, Fie upon you ! Out with you, man of the frock ! This is my cabin ! And, Eh ! the chattering Magpie does hold up to you the picture of Hell !

Heneken, hangen, to hang up, to present to view. Deele, dele, as the participle present of deelen, delen, to share, to divide ! Et, het, it. Jette, frock, the trope of the monk or friar, the confessor. Mijn, mine. Hutte, hovel, hut, cabin.

Who will be the chief mourner ?
I, said the Dove,
For I mourn for my love ;
And I'll be chief mourner.

Woe wel Bije schie hef, “ m'hoor neér ! ”
 Ei ! sie Heyd dij doove.
 Voer Hye meē hooren ; voer meē leeuw.
 End ei ! hel Bije schie hef, “ m'hoor neér ! ”

Whenever the industrious man is abruptly huffed with “ You must be submissive to me ” [you must honour me]. Eh ! Rustic, mind that you turn a deaf ear. Let the doer of the work come forwards with what is due to him ; let him come forward like the Lion. And, Eh ! this curse to the industrious man does abruptly come imperiously out with—“ You must be submissive to me ! ”

*Who will bear the pall ?
 We, said the Wren,
 Both the cock and the hen ;
 And we'll bear the pall !*

Woe wel bere de Pye al,
 Wie hij sie Heyd de Wreē 'n ;
 Boos dije Ka oock aen de henne ;
 End wie hel bere de Pye al !

When the cowl [monkhood] comports itself towards you in a bearish manner [addresses you in a rough authoritative tone], put on the same face to the savage as he does to you [return him his fierce looks] ; the Jackdaw increases in brutality whenever he finds any one to be a coward [afraid of him]. And the cowl does bear down all before him like Hell itself.

Beren, to roar out, to act the bear, to behave with savageness of the bear. Al, all, every one. Wies, as, in like manner. Hij, he. Wod, wreeds, savage, cruel, fierce, ferocious. 'N, in, in ; insien, sien in, to look into or at. Boos, malicious. Henne, a timid pusillanimous person.

*Who will toll the bell ?
 I, said the Bull,
 Because I can pull ;
 So Cock Robin, farewell.*

Woe wel toele de Bije hel;
 Ei ! sie Heyd de Bulle,
 Bij Ka aes, eye, kanne, pulle.
 So Ka oock 'r hobb' in. Vae 'r u hel.

Wherever agriculture proves to be a hell to the industrious cultivator; Eh! Rustic, behold the bull [the Pope's bull, bill of extortion]; to the Jackdaw [Monk] meat, eggs, jug, bottle. So the Jackdaw hops in among you. Hell takes hold of you.

*Toe*l, as the participle present of toelen, tuylen, to toil, to till, to labour the land. Bulle, a Pope's brief, mandate, bull, licence to act. Aes, food, meat. Eye, egg. Kanne, pitcher, cann, jug [thus as beer]. Pulle, bottle, ampulla [thus as wine]. Vae, the third person potential mood of vaen, vangen, to take hold of, to secure, to take into custody.

THE END.

SOUTHAMPTON:
 PRINTED BY J. COUPLAND, 70, HIGH-STREET.

